

The background of the entire page is a vertical rainbow gradient, transitioning from dark blue at the top to red at the bottom. In the upper portion, the text "YOU ARE A RAINBOW" is written in a large, white, serif font. The word "YOU" is on the first line, "ARE" on the second, "A" on the third, and "RAINBOW" on the fourth. The text is centered and partially enclosed by several concentric white arcs that resemble the top half of a rainbow, framing the words "YOU" and "ARE".

YOU ARE A RAINBOW

DISCOVERING YOUR PERSONALITY
WITH THE RAINBOW AURA PENDULUM

YOU ARE A RAINBOW

Original insights into the work of Christopher Hills
by researchers practicing his theory of Nuclear Evolution

Editor Norah Hills

UNIVERSITY OF THE TREES PRESS
P.O. BOX 644
BOULDER CREEK, CA. 95006

UNIVERSITY OF THE TREES PRESS

P.O. Box 644

Boulder Creek, California 95006

YOU ARE A RAINBOW

Discovering Your Personality
with the Rainbow Aura Pendulum

by members of the University of the Trees Community

Edited by Norah Hills

© 1979 by Norah Hills

The authors freely grant anyone the right to quote up to 350 words of text from this book without applying for specific permission as long as proper credit is given.

Printed in the United States of America by Book Press

1st printing 1979—12,000 copies

2nd printing 1981—20,000 copies

Cover design: John Hills

Rainbow logo: Stephanie Herzog and Bruce Cryer

Photography: Michael Hammer

Library of Congress Cataloging in Publication Data

University of the Trees

You are a rainbow

1 Personality 2 Color—Psychological aspects
3 Aura I Hills, Norah II Title
BF698 U49 1979 131'.32 79-13393
ISBN 0-916438-25-2

Library of Congress Number: 79-13393

DEDICATION

We have written this book so that we can share with you some of the riches given us so freely by Christopher Hills. Having discovered the Rainbow Body, he has devoted all his time, energy and inexhaustible love to guiding us toward that discovery within ourselves. We dedicate this book to him and to the highest potential in you and in us all.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

THE RAINBOW IN YOU	5
How do I see myself?	9
What is most important and real to you?	10
How can the spectrum help us?	11
RAINBOW OF CONSCIOUSNESS	15
Red	17
Orange	25
Yellow	33
Green	39
Blue	45
Indigo	53
Violet	59
WHERE ARE YOU IN THE RAINBOW?	66
A CHART OF THE SEVEN LEVELS	68
PERFECTING THE SEVEN LEVELS	73
THE AURA PENDULUM	93
What is an Aura?	94
The Supersense	94
Feedback	96
How does a pendulum work?	97
About doubt	98
Tuning a pendulum	99
Tuning to color	101
The energy centers	103
The rainbow harmonic	103
Choosing the best environment	105
Your thoughts can interfere	105
Double check	105
General uses of the pendulum	106
Work with a friend	106
Other uses	107
The pendulum as an evolutionary tool	107
AURA BALANCING	109
How to do an aura balancing	111
Some optional things you can do	115
Difficulty getting in touch	115
Attitudes for the aura balancer	118
WHAT IS UNIVERSITY OF THE TREES?	120
MATERIALS FOR FURTHER STUDY	122

THE RAINBOW IN YOU

"If you dig at the foot of the rainbow you shall find a pot of gold!" So said some wise old man or woman in ages past, and children of every age have run through woods and meadows to discover where the rainbow ends, but they have come back disappointed "It's just an old wives' tale" or "It's all a fairy story" they say. What they did not know or understand was that every fairy tale that ever was told and every legend and myth of old has within it a hidden truth or teaching that only a few can discover, but when they do find it something opens up inside them—an insight, a new light on the meaning of life. They realize why they were born on the planet earth.

This little book offers some tools which we can use to discover the meaning of the rainbow treasure or the pot of gold. In ancient times the stories were told, but only the sages knew their secret meaning. Only they realized and understood what it meant to have a "Rainbow Body"*. Now this knowledge is no longer secret. We now know that the rainbow body that the ancients talked about is the vibration in which all the frequencies of the human energy centers are resonating in perfect harmony. We know too that each of these frequencies resonates with a color of the rainbow and every man, woman and child on the planet earth has within them the ability to discover their own rainbow body if only they have the will and the desire. This involves setting out on an adventure of discovery, a search for our true self or our full potential. It is the same heroic adventure that all the myths and legends are talking about. It leads to the capture of the Golden Fleece, or the finding of the Holy Grail or the meaning of the pot of gold, or the discovery of your rainbow body. It leads to the answer to the eternal question . . . WHO AM I?

* See Nuclear Evolution: Discovery of the Rainbow Body, by Christopher Hills, pages 8-19

When you first read the title of this book, You Are a Rainbow, what was your response? Did you say to yourself as you looked in the mirror, "I don't see any rainbow colors around me"? Or did some acquaintance of yours come to mind and you thought, "Anyone less like a rainbow I could never imagine"? So what do we mean when we say, "You are a rainbow"? We are talking of the latent color vibrations that are within us all. Some are already shining and radiating out from us and can be seen by the clairvoyants and those who have trained themselves to sense them. The potential is already there within us to radiate the others that will make up the complete spectrum of seven rainbow colors or seven ways of responding to life from seven levels of consciousness.

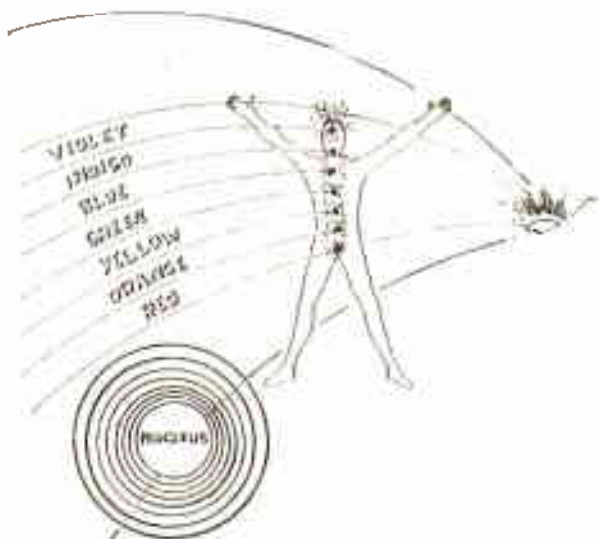

People who are clairvoyant (clear-seeing) can see beyond and around the physical body a glow of color or an aura which gives a key to the being of the person. Those of us who are not clairvoyant can train ourselves to see this glow by becoming sensitively aware of the tinge that shows on the skin of a person, like the bloom on a grape. Look at a group of people and you will find that they are not all pink or brown or yellow or black. If you look a second time you will see that two apparently similar skins have an additional layer of color over the skin that is different. I used to practice this exercise when I travelled to and from a teaching job in London. I would examine my fellow travellers on the Underground train as they sat swaying opposite to me, reading their newspapers or trying to sleep after a weary day in the city. By looking from one to the other I began to see differences that had nothing to do with their basic skin colors. For example, a little white-haired lady with a pale pink face might have the same blue glow about her skin as the young African student sitting beside her, and further along the line a man with what one would normally describe as a red face would have a greenish look about him.

Try this exercise daily. Once you have started it you will find it difficult to stop. It will become a habit and you will be training yourself to discriminate certain distinguishing characteristics in your fellow human beings. But for this exercise to have any real value or interest you will want to know what the colors mean. Many psychics and clairvoyants can tell you that you have a red or a violet aura but when you ask them what it means they will either say they do not know or they may give you a reading based on very little research. So it is better that you do your own research and study.

This brings us to the meaning of the seven rainbow colors. What is the significance of this aura of color around us? Why are we all different? We all breathe the same air and absorb the same light, but we reflect back to the world around us different vibrations and different colors. The answer lies in what the ancients called the Chakra system or the seven psychic energy centers which correspond to seven clusters of nerves along our spines. The expression of our personality or the way we relate to life regulates the flow of energy from the chakra system, thus creating the different colors of our energy body or aura. Each of these centers or chakras resonates to a color of the spectrum and when we absorb light or consciousness or thought energy we take it into the level or center from which we normally function. The diagram on the page following is a simplified illustration of the seven different chakras or levels of consciousness in our being.

IN THE CENTER is our real complete self that we call the nucleus or the seed or the kernel and in it is written the blueprint of what we can become when we have mastered all the other levels of functioning.

Just as the peacock or the carrot or the rabbit or the whale express and fulfill the cosmic message that was in the original egg or seed, so can we become what the great cosmic plan intended us to be, but we have free will to respond or not and it is only when we choose to expand that we can begin to open up our full potential on all the seven levels of awareness. When we make this choice the thrill of adventure enters our lives. There are no longer limits on how we can respond to life—unless we make those limits.

Questions may arise in the mind at this point. What color am I? What do the colors mean? Where are the other colors if only one is showing? If I have only one color in my aura does it mean that I'm a limited person? To help us to answer some of these questions before we go into the meaning and significance of the colors, we can ask ourselves some preliminary questions that may clue us in to how we are handling and responding to life right now. Even if we cannot see auras right away, it is good to take a look at our personalities for some insights into the ways we habitually respond to life, since these will tell us what is happening in our aura. The whole purpose and joy of this exercise is to get some clarity about the parts of ourselves that we have already developed, and also to get glimpses of that latent potential within all of us that only flickers on the other levels of consciousness but which could flame up into a radiant expression of new parts of our being. It might be a good idea to write your answers down so that you can come back to them again later.

HOW DO I SEE MYSELF?

Am I a dreamer? Do I live in a fantastic world of images that I long to describe and express? Yes

Do I love to socialize? No

Am I an intellectual, an "egghead"? No

Am I a sportsman or sportswoman? No

Do I love my possessions and collect more? Have I a strong need to be loved and to belong? Yes

Do I think I am psychic? Yes

Do I love to reminisce about the past? Yes

Before we go further we need to ask ourselves whether we are living with any basic assumptions about how other people function or ought to live or respond to us. Some of us may even assume that everyone is pretty much like us, so that if we are religious we get upset and judgemental when others don't share the same feelings. If we are into sports we can hardly believe that someone would rather read a book than go to the big game. Once we free ourselves of these limiting assumptions and accept that the same universal consciousness or light or energy can express itself through us in a million different ways and in numberless permutations, then we can become heroic adventurers making new discoveries in new territories every day of our lives. We can break through the limits of our habitual ways of thinking, speaking and acting and surprise not only our friends but even ourselves.

The next set of questions zeroes in on the seven levels more specifically. Most people will relate to one or two of them; very few will relate to all seven, and even those who do will know that they have a long way to go to the full realization of the potential of all seven. But we all have the chance of being Rainbows and of opening up new ways of working, relating, living and loving. We all have the ability somewhere inside us to radiate on all seven levels, like a beautiful engine firing in perfect rhythm on all cylinders, or an inspiring piece of music that uses all the notes of the scale to produce wonderful harmonies. If you have played a piano with one or two notes "sticking" or where some notes sound more loudly than others, you will know the frustration of not having all the frequencies at your disposal. Most of us function like faulty pianos. Some of our notes sound loud and clear; others are weak or even silent. Now we are going to tune our own instruments so that the full richness of the harmonies can be heard. Perhaps you are limiting yourself and attaching a label which describes your habitual mode of functioning, but it could be that it leaves out a very important part, a latent part, of your being. So now let us take the self-analysis one step further by moving away from limiting labels to the seven ways in which people respond to life and to love.

WHAT IS MOST IMPORTANT AND REAL TO YOU?

(Check one only)

- ☐ Your body and what it can see, smell, taste, hear and touch? Your sex life? Your physical achievements?

- ☐ Your relationships? Your contribution to family, social, political and even international welfare, communication and peace?
- ☐ Your clever brain? Your organized life and plans? Your powers of analysis, your insights and reasoning ability? Your spontaneous response to new ideas?
- ☐ Your security? The things or money that you have accumulated? Your safe and established relationships?
- ☐ Your religious faith? Past memories? Truths and concepts from authoritative and accepted sources? (These could be religious, philosophical or scientific.)
- ☒ Your dreams of the future? The great potential within you that you feel you can bring into manifestation if only life gives you the opportunity?
- ☐ Your inner world of fantasy and images? The urge to paint or write or compose in music what is crying out for expression within you?

It will be interesting for you to look back at these answers when you have read to the end of the book.

HOW CAN THE SPECTRUM HELP US?

As the result of long research with light and color and their relationship to human consciousness, people like Christopher Hills, author of Nuclear Evolution, and Max Luscher, originator of the Luscher Color Test, have opened up for us whole new worlds. They have given us tools that clue us in to our own relationship to the light and energy that we absorb every day and to the colors of the spectrum. If you have taken a Luscher Color Test you will know that the results are amazingly and sometimes disconcertingly accurate. If you have read Nuclear Evolution you will already know far more than the compass of this little book can ever convey to you, and you can pass this book on to a friend. Then he or she can also discover the exciting relationship between the spectrum of light and the levels of human consciousness, and can start the search for the pot of gold.

Christopher Hills' research into color psychology is based upon the fact that when light shines through a prism or a many-faceted crystal it splits into the colors of the rainbow, revealing any number, from one to seven, according to the angle of the light ray or the number of facets exposed to it. We too are crystals and are penetrated by light or radiant energy every day of our lives. What shows in our aura as blue or green or yellow is the re-radiated light that we have not absorbed. This same light or radiation or energy is absorbed by every object in its path, depending on the object's capacity for absorption. The absorption varies, as it does in a radio receiver, with the oscillating frequency of both the vibrating matter of the body or object and the electromagnetic radiation that we call light. Everything in the universe is oscillating, and the frequency depends on what kind of atoms it is made of. Your own body is made up of various combinations of the forty-four known natural elements, all held together and vibrating at their natural frequencies. So, according to your particular combination of elements, the light you absorb and the light you re-radiate or the vibration you express will be determined by your bodily and mental health and also by the emotional stress to which you subject your body. Every thought that you have adds to or subtracts from the physical tension in your body. Your thoughts, your fears, your emotions, all condition the way that you use life's energy or consciousness, and they literally "color" your aura.

To put it another way—every morning we wake up to receive a new supply of light or consciousness or energy to use as we choose during the day. We can use it to kill or to cure, to love or to hate, to drift or to drive. We all use it differently. According to the level from which we operate our consciousness, just like the facet of the crystal, we shall give out a different vibration to those around us and we shall show a different color in our aura. So we find that the colors of the rainbow and our levels of awareness or consciousness are related. It is with this realization that the excitement of the discovery begins. To discover the aura is to start to know ourselves and those about us better. We begin to understand why communication can break down between people operating from entirely different levels of consciousness. We flash into the lives of some of the people we know, people who love each other but who never seem to communicate at any depth, and they do not understand why.

One example from my own experience will trigger a dozen others in your mind. A young friend had just obtained his first lectureship in a West Indian university and for him it opened vistas of fascinating research into his special subject, the origins and development of language. His attractive wife saw the job as an entree to a social life that she had been longing for, but when he moved to his desk every night after dinner her hopes began to fade. When he tried to share his findings and his excitement about his work her eyes became glazed as she wondered whether he would spare time for tomorrow's cocktail party at a professor's house. Gradually they drifted into their own worlds; apart from small talk about the house, the garden, clothes and meals they found they had little in common. She began to go out in the evenings alone and eventually started a romance with one of the professors. He blindly pursued his obsessive research until he suddenly woke up one morning to hear, "Would you consider a divorce?" At this point they began to talk and to go deeply into what each had been feeling. He told how he had felt she did not care about his work or his advancement and recognition in the academic world. She poured out her frustration with long evenings of silence, when music and laughter drifted through the tropical night from other homes on the campus. Could their communication have opened up much earlier and saved the pain of living together in two separate worlds? You will find in this book keys to the discovery of these different inner worlds. They are offered to everyone who is saddened by failure to communicate with someone they love, whether it be lover, co-worker, parent or child.

—Norah Hills

Understanding the seven different levels in each other brings us nearer to group consciousness and to the Rainbow Body.

RAINBOW OF CONSCIOUSNESS

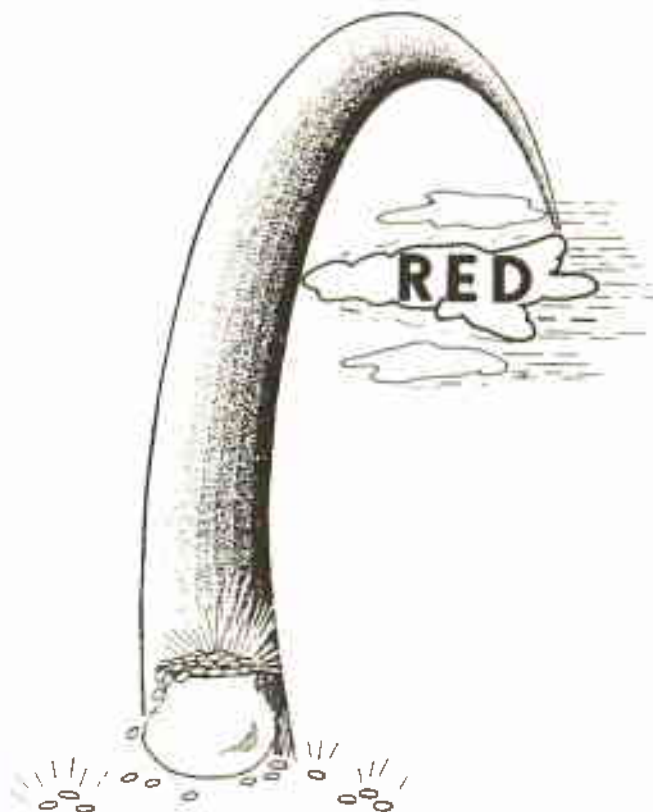

Seven of us who live, work and study at the University of the Trees would like to share with you now some of the ways in which we usually relate to life, to people, to problems and to love. Each of us lives in a different part of the rainbow of consciousness most of the time and we have been working together to refine that part and also to open ourselves to the exploration of other, unfamiliar colors in the spectrum. Hand in hand with our work on ourselves as individuals goes our work towards a group consciousness in which we tune to each others' frequencies and, in so doing, tune to the Universal frequency that is the synthesis of all notes and colors and which we call the vibration of the Rainbow Body.

The group of us who have written this book are putting Nuclear Evolution into practice at the University of the Trees as a model for a new way of developing relationships and communicating with each other on different levels of consciousness. In the seven sections that follow, each of us has written from our own experience. We may not have included all the characteristics of our particular color level, since we have only written about what is most real to us, but later on in the book you will find a chart that supplements what we have said and sets out for you the main features, both positive and negative, of the seven rainbow levels. If you identify strongly with one of us you will want to explore that particular level more deeply, and in the other levels you may discover qualities that you would like to develop. The Further Study list of books and tapes at the end of this book will help you in these explorations. The seven psychological descriptions of the levels that you are about to read are only part of the story of a new evolutionary push now taking place for better human communication. It is a complete brain revolution which involves control of our physiological processes. This is very fully described in the Rise of the Phoenix which sets out the new model of consciousness in great detail. (See Further Study list.)

Richard is our campus man of action. His red level energy makes him quick to respond and react.

The red level is purely physical. It is pure action, devoid of any thought. It jumps into the thick of it and then asks, "Hey, how did I get in this pickle?" A friend asks me, "Will you build me a shelf?" "You bet!" I reply. I'm off and running to the wood pile. I grab a board and my hammer and Bang! Bang! Bang! But it turns out that my friend wanted a glass shelf, not a wooden one.

The body is a physical organism. It has senses that feel, see, hear, smell and taste. That's simple enough. The red level is the experience of using these faculties. For example, I'm walking along the street. I see a beautiful girl walking on the other side of the street. My first thought is "Jesus! What a knockout!" My head keeps turning as she walks by.

Finally I'm looking backwards like a doll with a three hundred and sixty degree neck. I walk into a pole and step off the curb at the same time. Why? Because I'm not thinking anymore. I'm just reacting. That's the red level. My reactions ranged from the stimulation of seeing the girl's ankles and curves all the way to wanting to touch and feel her, all the way to wanting to grab her and fling her down on a bed. That's the red level we call the sensation type which lives from one physical stimulus to the next. But that's not all the red level because even the red level has other levels within its structure.

From my experience the physically-orientated person is concerned with three essence "sub-drives" within his major drive to experience the world through his senses:

1. Hunger, pain, sleep, appetites of various kinds, addictions, etc;
2. Self-preservation, flight or fight, territoriality;
3. Sexual reproduction.

Hunger for red level people can amount to compulsive eating, eating for the taste, regardless of whether we are full or not. The second sub-drive, self-preservation, I've experienced in many ways. Jeff tells me, "I don't know, man, but I think you're kind of closed about your feelings." Inside me a feeling comes, "Why you son of a bitch, you're not so damned open yourself!" Bang! I react. Of course I don't hit physically but the reaction is just like that. That's red level.

This reactive aspect of consciousness is important to understand because until we do we can never really become masters of our own destiny. We will always be reacting. Many situations are not really threatening our life; they are only threatening our ego, but we react as if it were our life. I can remember going to a booksellers' conference attended by representatives from every major book publisher in the country along with national distributors, small presses and major printers from as far away as Germany. Our press was more or less just getting into the act at that time, and one of the men from a company who distributed our books came over to our area with a difference of opinion as to our credit policy. He was very upset that he had been given a delinquent notice and was rather loudly and aggressively making his point heard. I was in a deserted hall along with my friends, Rod, Robert, Roger, Dan and this fellow. The louder his voice got the harder my heart began to pound. The next thing I heard was this fellow making threats, on our territory no less, in the small press section. In no time I was eye to eye with him, backing him against a wall and breathing down his neck. My friends were shocked. I had reacted far out of all proportion to the threat. I was prepared to do battle.

Every level has its own positive and negative expression, so if you are red level, you may not be a fighter, which is rather negative, but a lover, which is more positive. So the next sub-drive in this area is sexual reproduction or the urge to mate. I suppose if God hadn't created sex, he'd have been hard put to come up with a grander sensation . . . and that is coming from my own red level. It is really uncanny how the Cosmos motivates us. Pleasure and sensuality motivate thousands of people to buy a certain brand of cigarettes that will make them into the "Turk" who will then go buy a certain brand of Scotch in order to capture a certain demure and suggestive female on a nationally-advertised poster so that they can carry on the greatest of love affairs in the smallest of cars. You can see how the entire red level is geared to the body, the sense of touch, to experiencing reality through the senses. "Drink this", "smoke that", "taste this", "recline in this and feel that." So much of our advertising is sensation-orientated and geared to sex. I used to spend most of my day thinking about sex. But every level has its positive and negative expression, including the urge to reproduce the species. In its most positive expression there is a tender yielding and awareness between one partner and another with no grabbing. In its most negative sense, the sex urge is rape.

The trouble with the red level is that it is so homed in on its own senses that it doesn't open to other people or become sensitive to their feelings. If you think you are a body, you are separate from other bodies, and you are more likely to compare and compete with them than try to get into their worlds or feel at one with them. "How many pounds can you lift?" "How many push-ups can you do?" "How many drinks are you man enough to drink?" and other macho comparisons. Comparison is based on something outside ourselves. Red level people do this a lot. The drive to know reality through sensations comes out sometimes as a very pugnacious attitude in which we try to dominate others with our power or our physical being. Red level people may choose to be businessmen, farmers, firemen, policemen, carpenters, laborers, truck drivers, concrete layers, brick masons, etc. A salesman can be very red level because he has to be aggressive and literally get his shoe in the door before you slam it. A football player has to crunch you before you crunch him. For myself, I have found that in order to live in the world with other people, I have had to learn to channel the urge to conquer and dominate others into an equivalent desire to conquer myself. I've noticed in myself that if I go after sex as a real major concern, then I've got no consciousness left for tuning into others. I'm concerned with me. If my senses tell me that the way I see and hear is the correct way, I'll never see that others feel my cup of tea is cold compared to theirs. I feel that is the main point this book is trying to get across, that there are other realities, other points of view than our own. As long as we don't know that our own view is only a comparative view, we won't be able to see or hear that there are other levels of consciousness.

I seem to function best, like other red levels I know, when I work with other people who bring their minds and imaginations to the work in hand. At the University of the Trees, where we are working toward group consciousness, we produce the best results when we use people from the group who operate from different levels. If the far-seeing person gives us the vision, the rational planner can set up the schedule. Then the money-conscious one can look into the cost and the organizer of people gets others involved. What they need at this point is the executor, so now I can get into action and manifest the job. Maybe this is how they built the great cathedrals to the glory of God, with the red level carpenters, masons and builders fulfilling the dreams of the planners and giving concrete expression to what the visionaries saw in their imaginations.

LOVE

I've already talked about love on this level a bit before. Basically red level love is sensation, but there are several ways to go about it. You can grab, beat or physically subdue your partner, like the proverbial cave man (or cave woman). Or you can tenderly care for the physical sensitivity of the other. I've done both. I'm a grabber by nature and while there are occasions when this is what a woman wants, I feel basically that the message I get back is that this is just a crude and selfish way of making "love". Strictly speaking, physical love alone necessitates two love objects, which solidifies the idea that we are separate beings from each other, whereas yielding sensitively to another leads towards union which is the climactic response of shared euphoria. Bunny clubs, strip houses and the lure of countless advertisements to help us conquer the opposite sex only pull us away from the union. I think one of the pinnacles of the red level expression is to be able to physically express love to everyone, not necessarily sexually but physically. Here at University of the Trees I see and admire people like Robert who can hug a man or a woman with equal ease, who can express tenderness to male or female in a positive way so that the receiver indeed feels love.

TIME

Up until now, I've avoided talking about time. In reality time is very different for every level of consciousness, but for the red level the only time is NOW. I want to eat now, I want to do it now, and so on. If you're driving down the road and you look out over your hood, the road goes by very fast. But if you look off to a distant mountain the road moves slowly. So the red level time world is like looking out just over the hood. Events happen to us and we only just have time to react. Before we know it, it is tax time. Or we have ten minutes to start and finish our term paper. Or we have to build a house by tonight. We want the whole thing done now. We want instant enlightenment as well. At any rate, because you can only feel a thing with your senses as soon as it happens and not before (as with your imagination) or after (as with your memory), the only time you can physically experience something is now. You can only be hurt now. Because the red level is like this, always reacting to stimulation and responding to impulse, it is like a tree in the wind. Its fate depends on what the wind brings. It can't move too far this way or that because of its nature and its attachment to the ground. If the wind brings a lightning bolt, it burns up. If the wind brings down another tree near it, it loses its branches. If Nature brings a bird, it can give shelter. And so on. The red level is like this. It reacts to what's in front of it now. Consequently it starts a lot of projects and finishes very few. Or often, as in my case, it is very un-thorough. I have a very hard time, for example, committing myself to tasks that are long and drawn out. I have to do it now. Tomorrow the winds will bring a new project and off I go reacting to the new stimulation, leaving the old one abandoned or half done. Consequently I'm not very responsible in terms of a whole job. I'm only responsible for isolated bits of action, or so I think. The best example I can think of was helping Norah Hills to edit Nuclear Evolution. I'd write a few bits and think that was great, but I wouldn't correct the spelling or check the grammar or make my handwriting legible. Why? Because like many carpenters I know, clean-up is for the laborers. Framing the walls is where the action is! And that I could relate to. The rest could happen tomorrow, and that I could not relate to.

So the vision of the red level is minute by minute, sensation by sensation. One response triggers off another stimulation, always under the nose. From the peanut butter to the cookies to the paper to the coffeepot to the TV to the liquor store to the boudoir to the coffeepot to work to pounding nails or selling shoes or dressing kids or the ten thousand tasks which we hop between in the bubbling, bouncy, saucy energy of the red level of awareness.

—Richard Welker

When orange level people get together there is a sharing of hearts and hospitality

Since this is the level of sociability and relating to others, two of us are going to share our experience. Sonia has always loved to be with people and to work for the good of others while I, mostly because of a dictatorial father, have rebelled against socializing and as a result have had some problems with the negative side of the orange level. My name is Arlene. My father is a very orange level person, always wanting to seem respectable and normal, always motivated by what others would think, always competing to keep up with the Joneses. Actually, in the military atmosphere where I grew up, it was more like keeping up with the ranks. He limited himself to social values and tried to force his family into the same mold. All too often we found ourselves performing socially to meet an accepted image. I first noticed my own resistance to this when I was a kid, going to church.

The family goes to church as a unit. We're a nice respectable family and we all go to church and we join either the choir or the Luther League or whatever the right thing is. And everybody there is Marine Corps. So it's Marine Corps religious Lutherans. I don't want to be in the Marine Corps and I don't want to be in the Lutheran church and I don't like other people. I'm reacting to all these situations I'm being pushed into, so I don't make any contacts with anybody. It's a feeling of closing off, especially in social situations, like going to family picnics and outings with the Marine Corps. In the Marine Corps everybody drinks, so they would go to a club and all the kids would go and sit in this place and they were supposed to socialize just like the big people. Everybody gets "Shirley Temples" and you are supposed to sit around with all the kids drinking Shirley Temples, being little socialites. And then they all come over to the house. My family loves for all these people to come over and they have big gatherings. It's not like they are really friends but everybody knows everybody. There are a lot of acquaintances; they are friends on some level. All my parents' friends are just alike. They kind of hang around and they don't know what to do, so they get together and they all wonder what they should be doing so then they invite some more friends over and still they don't know what to do. Actually this is my dad inviting all these people. He sets my mother up; she's supposed to entertain them all and to have a good time. Then he calls us kids out of the bedroom, yelling, "Kids, kids, kids, here lemme show you, kids, kids, hey kids, come on in here, here's Sergeant so and so; I want you to meet Sergeant and his wife." So we stand there and the Sergeant asks us a question and my dad looks at us and says, "What do you say?"

Yes Sir! or ...?" And we say, "Oh yes Sir!" Then we stand there and he says, "Why don't you go play with Suzy? They brought Suzy. Here's Suzy and the kids. Why don't you go in the back room and play with them?" And I say, "I don't wanta play with 'em." But he sends us off together and we go to my room and we just sit because I won't talk to her. I'm thinking, "I don't know what to do with this person. What does she want me to do here? I'm not sure what I'm supposed to do, so I better not do anything."

Or there was the time, before all these outings and parties began, back when I was only four or five years old, when I was taken to kindergarten. The worst thing about school was that they have recesses and you're supposed to go out and be social with all these kids. It was scary because they were all going to play together and they were all going to start talking about doing whatever kids do together, and it was just a forced situation from this half-hour to that half-hour and you'd have to play with each other. I found an oak tree in the yard and I would go to this tree and I'd kind of look down and I'd walk around the roots of the tree for the whole half-hour, and every now and then a teacher would come and say, "Why don't you go play with those kids over there?" and I'd say, "Oh, I just like walking around this tree. This is what I want to do. I don't really feel like playing with anyone today; thank you for asking. I just think I'll stay right here." I would say whatever I thought would get me by without having to tell them what was really happening. Then every now and then the kids would start to come over and I would get really nervous and uncomfortable, thinking, "I really do want to play with them. I really would like to go play," but I was too self-conscious and too afraid. So I spent a whole year walking around this tree and I got the tree memorized and I knew every root on it.

The positive orange happened when we moved to South Carolina and there were all these relatives, nice big warm wonderful people. It was easy. I never was on the spot, because there were lots and lots of kids, and the adults would say, "Go on and get out of here, go play," and no one got singled out. I was twelve or thirteen and I liked it there because it was okay not to be the way my dad wanted me to be, because nobody was even noticing. My dad wanted me to be really social. He wanted me to be able to do the things he did, have people over and talk really loud and be the center of the show—HO HO HO! HA HA HA! and slap people on the back. This is his image of what you do—you have all these wonderful people around you and you have such a good time. So he wanted me to go into the Luther League and be like that. Then he could say, "Oh yeah, yeah, the whole family; there's Arlene over there doing the same thing." So what I did was not talk to anybody and this ruined his image; it put him on the spot because I wasn't doing the right thing. I was always feeling like I couldn't just be whatever way I was, and I had no idea what that way was.

Now that I am here at the University of the Trees and have found a group of people who love me for being myself, I'm beginning again, as I did in South Carolina, to discover that I do have positive orange. As soon as there is a place for it, it just pops out, like it was there waiting for the right situation, but as long as I was saying, "Yes Sir," it couldn't come out. But to fully see the orange level in its positive form, you'd have to talk to someone like Sonia. Sonia has a bright orange aura and is a jolly talkative person, warm and welcoming.

ANOTHER VIEW

OF THE ORANGE LEVEL CONSCIOUSNESS

I am Sonia and to be cut off from people is to me a dreadful punishment, a situation in which a part of me atrophies and I become disgruntled with life in general and my immediate environment in particular. I am a people person. Hail to people! I want to be with people, work with people, talk to people and make people happy. Then I'll be happy too. Some of the most satisfying moments of my life have been when I, the real me, emerge from a shell and give all I have to a fellow-being in need.

One of my earliest recollections of a positive orange level type of activity occurred when I was around eight or nine years old. Two of my good friends had an argument and were quite miserable as a result. They were not talking and were generally being disagreeable towards each other. I could sense deep down their unhappiness and I felt I had to do something. I invited them both to tea where they sorted out their differences and renewed their friendship, all of which left me feeling very happy and pleased with myself.

I have pleasant memories too of all my previous job experiences, where I was always available to assist people. I wasn't tucked away in some two by four space looking at the walls or my typewriter. I was "out there", up front, helping people, being ready, willing and able. For an orange level person this is fulfillment. I get a strong sense of satisfaction and self-worth in forgetting myself and extending myself to others, for it is in that giving frame of mind that I realize that we came from one source and eventually have to become one to return to that source.

On other occasions, when I am planning a social event, whether it be for just the pleasure of having people in, or some important event which is being organized around a social or humanitarian purpose, I am so centered and alert that the only adjective I feel I can use to describe this feeling is elation. My whole being and consciousness is in the planning and executing of the function. I am also aware, somewhere in the back of my head, that as soon as this event is over I shall have to start planning for the next one. In fact, oftentimes before the present party is over, I am already planning the next. I seem to be always ready for anything to do with people, for to me human social contact is an intrinsic part of my being, an integral part of life. I am in the center looking out, reaching and touching, not sitting on the fringe trying to get in. It's a good expansive feeling.

Sometimes I ask myself why I feel so good and I allow my mind to explore the feeling in my heart. Then I discover that I see this reaching out at the social level as just the beginning of something much bigger, expanding outward until it becomes a bringing together of humanity as a whole—the world brotherhood that has got to be.

LOVE

Orange level love is a pervasive vibration of warmth and concern for the happiness of others. Maybe that is why the color orange is so warm. You will find that we orange level people express our love in an expansive way which serves our fellowman one way or another. The trap for the orange level is pride, and our sharing may involve a "showing off" or "look what I've conquered" vibe. Instead of pure giving and radiating of our warmth, we may give in order to get confirmation from others.

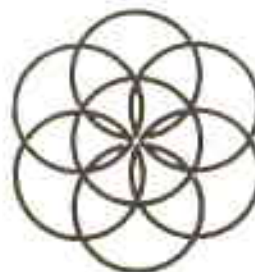

My own orange level love is one of spontaneous giving, sometimes almost a compulsive urge to share, that in its negative aspect means lack of discrimination. My love for my family, both immediate and extended family, is very strong, and in fact I sometimes view my extended family as the whole of mankind. A most impractical perception I grant, but I seem naturally inclined to identify with the miseries and joys of even those I see on television or read about in the newspapers as if they were my next of kin. I have the urge to defend the defenseless.

TIME

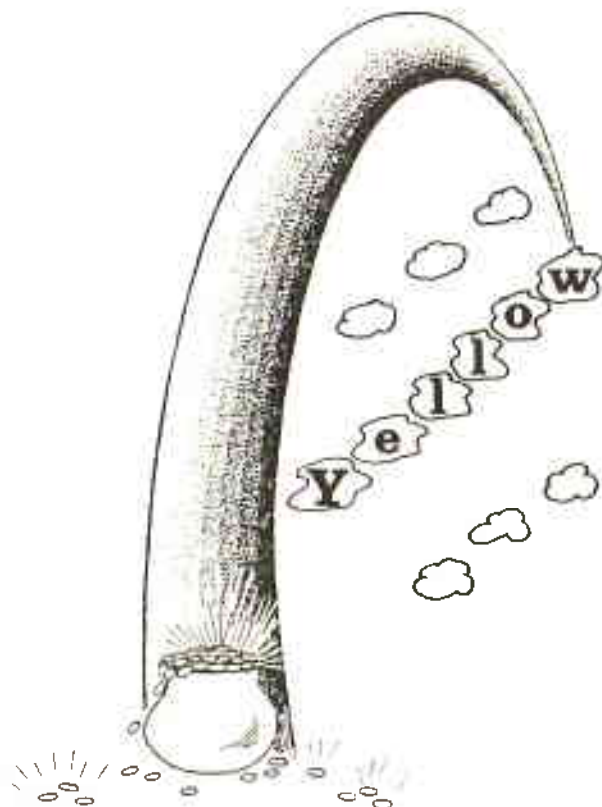

Orange lives very much in the present like the red but has one eye on the future. So there is always a touch of preparing for a future event, because it's the expanding that is important. We see everything that happens in terms of the wider community where we will have an effect beyond the immediate present situation. What an orange person does now takes into account the possible outcome of the action in the future. A hostess may invite certain guests with a view to easing her husband's promotion. The politician will push forward a social reform with an eye on a future election. And the great and selfless orange people will sacrifice their time and energy now so that others may reap the rewards of their labors in the years ahead. Occasionally, here at the University of the Trees we find ourselves doing rather tedious tasks such as filing, packaging or last minute clean-up on books, etc. However, when that orange level vibration is functioning we find that the monotony of the moment is dissolved in a desire to transmit, through the letters we write and the books we ship out, the same inspiration that we feel to the hearts of others in time to come.

—Arlene Behl
—Sonia Beasley

Joanne, one of our best yellow level planners, spells out the things that need to be done.

Usually I find myself radiating a yellow aura. Much of the time my mind goes "click-click" adding things up in some logical sequence and tending to be very analytical. I see most situations in outline form . . . ABC . . . 1,2,3. I'm very cause and effect conscious, looking at things not only as they appear at the time, but also figuring out how they got that way and where they are going. Don't tell me about something "out of the blue" or out of context like, "The old guy down the street is selling his house." I'll want to know: "Which old guy? Which street? How did you meet him today? Which house does he live in? Why is he selling? Where is he going? What price is he asking?" etc., etc. I am only just beginning to see that this insistence on logical sequence and filling in all the facts all comes from my head and that it gets me into trouble with some of my friends who live in their hearts most of the time. One of them came to me the other day sharing her heartache, seeking a little compassion. I immediately started breaking down the situation, weighing all the details, rationalizing the bad points, justifying the good ones and I ended up completely outside my friend's world and out of touch with her feelings:

"Now let's see, you got jilted by this guy, well . . .

A. Had he ever given you the idea he loved another?

B. If so, maybe you've been blind and,

C. Now that he's left, you've got to get it together and realize that there are plenty of fish in the sea and that you're a fine person, and he wasn't right for you anyway . . ."

I can see myself now with my mouth going a mile a minute, my eyes blinking like lights flashing on and off. I sometimes have a vision of myself with a steady stream of ticker tape flowing in one ear and out the other. It feels so good to be "in gear" like that that I never stop to think what it feels like to the other person. But lately my friends have begun to let me know that it drives them up the wall and they wish I would get into my heart. It was such a shock to me.

In the life I belonged to in the theatrical world of New York, my clickety-click way of operating brought me tons of ego food. People said, "Wow! Joanne's really with it these days!", and I'd get a charge from this intense "ready for anything" feeling. But here, at the University, my off-the-top-of-the-head responses that don't always spring from my deeper feelings make others feel that I haven't been real with them, and I jump off into high gear before I've really listened to anyone else. I was chattering away to Richard and some other friends about an offer I had had from Brian to do an Aura Balancing (see page 109) for me. I was explaining why I hadn't been able to get together with him, how busy I'd been when he was available, and how he was off-campus when I had some spare time, and so on. But what Richard and the others were trying to find out was—did I really want Brian to do the aura balancing at all? Richard said, "Come on, Joanne. I want it direct. Tell us yes/no, black/white, instead of all this skirting around the subject." I was so caught up in my surface explanations that it took me forty-five minutes before I saw what he meant.

The difficulty of getting in touch with deeper heart feelings is very real for us yellow level people because our heads want to rationalize everything. Heart feelings are so illogical. When you ask us to respond directly from the heart we frown and try to figure out what the heart must be, instead of just feeling it. I was talking to Ann, another yellow level, about this problem of getting into the heart and she said, "Yeah, I know just what you mean. Being yellow level is hard sometimes. People ask me to share what I'm feeling, but I just can't do it. All my feelings seem to have vanished. I'd like to share one but there aren't any there." Then she said something that I really responded to. She said, "I guess that lots of people won't understand this about their intellectual level unless life has matched them up with a mate or a friend who absolutely refuses to settle for the cold analytical, surface kind of relating that yellow levels do. I feel lucky to be matched with red level Robert. When he gives a public speech or lecture, nothing he says seems to fit together. It makes me so nervous to sit there and listen to him. There is no logical sequence. He just says whatever pops into his head. It is sometimes a wonder to me that people don't ask for their money back. But they just like him. His heart spontaneously touches their hearts and soon they are all laughing with him, and I'm laughing too."

Like Ann, life has paired me up with someone from a different level of consciousness, the blue level. The best moments with my blue buddy, the moments when the most inspiring and electrical things happen, are when I see his sense of devotion and how he opens himself up to God and gives himself freely. That sharing really softens my yellow and gets me in touch with my own heart. My mate will describe how he functions a little later in this book. Like most blue levels, he tends to get hung up on the way he was taught, the past, and ideas and concepts of how things should be. This sometimes makes change threatening to him, whereas change for me is part of the spice of life. New projects, new ideas, a sudden change in a program, all these things are a challenge to my resourcefulness and problem-solving skill. Often we yellow level people see things as problems just for the fun of producing a solution. You'll hear us start a sentence with, "The problem is ..." and then off we go analyzing it and working our way through to a logical solution, probably talking eloquently about every step as it comes to mind. If there really is a problem, that is where we often shine. A business department runs into difficulties, and it's the planning yellow level that comes along and reorganizes everything so that it runs more smoothly. Then we get some nice ego food and praise for saving the situation, which can go to our heads so that we are inclined to think we are always right. It's always hard for me to believe that everyone doesn't have the same organizing faculty, and my first reaction is, "God, they're STUPID!" So then I have to check the areas where I'm really stupid.

When people start telling me about how they experience all my logical lists and brittle chatter then I get agitated. They say that if I will be quiet, then I will experience a different level of consciousness. Sometimes I'll try the silence and it doesn't work. I'll be silent but my mind is still going, still putting things in order. If others are being quiet, I can be quiet for awhile, but pretty soon I feel something needs to be happening. There needs to be a "fill" there. So I will say something like, "Wasn't that a beautiful moment of quiet and sharing?" And then I'll think to myself, "Why'd you have to go and say that? It was just fine without you saying anything." This is another aspect of the yellow level. Being so critical of others, we are even harder on ourselves.

When I was a child I was always challenging the authority of my parents and other adults. I was convinced that I was right. Even when playing games with my playmates I felt I had control and often behaved like a mental bully, not budging from my position—to the point where either I got my way or I would find a way to end the game. Now I can look back on many a sleepless night in my childhood, tossing about on my "yellow mental board" criticizing myself in the end for my actions and realizing that perhaps I was wrong and just too stubborn to let go. Now, having begun to get some criticism from others for the first time in my life, I am feeling very sensitive about my yellow level. I keep wondering, where is my heart? If I'm so analytical and can organize everything and make lists of priorities, why doesn't the top of my list read, "BE IN YOUR HEART"? That means stop the computer and feel. We yellow types want to figure out how to change the world, but we don't always love the world. I don't mind changing everything around me, but changing myself is not so easy. I see that this is my next step—to allow my heart to discover its own love.

LOVE

The excitement of change, the thrill of spontaneous response and the joy of sharing a lively verbal exchange tends to attract us yellow level people to others of our kind. Our need, however, is to open up other areas so that our relationships are not all at the head level. Once we can respond from the heart and even enjoy silent communication, our love life becomes more fulfilling. Once we have experienced irrational loving and pure devotion, our relationships rely less on verbal exchange, which we can still enjoy, and more on the deeper exchange of soul to soul (or being to being) communication.

TIME

The whole approach to time is linear. Watch a yellow level person frown and look either irritated or bewildered when you talk about an event in the present without filling in the original causes (past time) or without considering the logical consequences (future time)—“I’ve put the plants in,” you say. “Which plants? Where did you get them? When are they going to bloom?” says the yellow level. We like everything set out sequentially: “You remember the red and blue primula plants we bought last Sunday at the garden shop. I’ve planted them in rows at the edge of the round flower bed. They should be in full bloom in about three to four weeks.” The yellow smiles approval at you. That’s how things should be told!

—Joanne Jonas

A green level person loves to share her heart, like Ary with her friend Robert in the picture above.

Imagine it's springtime. The winter has been long and cold and bleak. The warm sun has melted off the snows and penetrated the earth, and now it lovingly germinates the seeds beneath the ground, catalyzing the life juices of all living things and bringing the buds to flower. You go for a drive in the country—your first of the season. The air is fresh and warm and verdantly rich. You approach your favorite spot on the old back road where it breaks out into open fields and winds through hills and meadows that roll off endlessly to the horizon. And then Mother Nature presents you with her spectacular birthing event—you are suddenly immersed in the brilliant green splendor of new grasses running wildly everywhere, almost vibrating in the light of the sun. You feel a sudden opening up, a rush of joy, a sense of well-being, an aliveness and at-oneness with all things living.

This feeling is no accident, for in truth we are at one with everything that lives. And it is the green level person who most personifies this law of the universe. Remember the plant in the corner of the kitchen that always twists itself around and reaches toward the window? It is seeking to store up the light that will start the photosynthesis process going, will give it nourishment and thus the security that it will live and flourish.

And this same search for security is the essence of the green level of awareness. A need to feel "safe" in the universe to avoid any hazards produces a deep unconscious feeling of lack which fuels the fires of acquisitiveness. And so the storing up of value and security to compensate for this lack could run to a multitude of things—money, food, knowledge, antiques, or even a person's own energy. We would all like to store up life force through an inner reserve that never allows us to be depleted. On a conscious level this stored up energy manifests as that wonderful "oomph" that makes other people glad to be around us—the joy is catching and love abounds.

"He loves me, he loves me not." Play this game, and with each petal that's picked off the daisy you swing from the most positive green state to the most negative. You're up, you're down, your heart bounces like a yo-yo, and indeed it is the state of your heart and the fact that you "wear it on your sleeve" that is another dominant sign of this green level. Whether giving or receiving, the green level heart is "right out there". Confide in a green level friend about your worry over your ailing father and a softness and caring immediately spreads over him or her. These people are the ones you know you can go to in times of stress because in their positive state they are pure heart. Ask them how they're feeling today and be ready for a lot more than talk about the great party they went to last night. They may come back with, "I'm feeling really lonely inside and yearning for a deep relationship," or "What you said last night hurt me deeply, but I want you to know I still feel a lot of love for you."

A typical response came recently from Susan, a green level friend of mine on campus. A man I loved very much had decided to leave our community and we had just had a group meeting at which he explained why he was leaving and said goodbye. I was in much emotional pain as I left the meeting and walked down the street toward my house. Susan was behind me, and just as I turned into my driveway she simply said, "Ary, I really love you," and gave me a gentle hug. No yellow level rationalizations of why it was better this way anyway, or orange level "Let's go out on the town tomorrow night so you can forget your troubles," just a big heart, feeling what I'm feeling, opening itself up to me and giving me love. That expression was more of a balm for me than any other words or actions could have been.

At the other end of the spectrum was a response from John, another green level friend of mine here at the University. I aired a gripe that I had with him and we hashed the issue out with each other. We saw that I was off base in directing my frustrated feelings over the situation at him and that actually a third party was at fault, so we smoothed things out with each other and concluded the discussion on a good note. A couple of days later while at work John came up to me and said, "You know, I've been thinking about that talk we had the other day and even though we worked it out I still feel I can't trust you. You made me feel insecure and it seemed as if you still had some ill feeling toward me. Is that true?" I explained that I hadn't at all, but simply had been very pressured in my work at that time and so may have been a little short tempered. But here was an example of negative green at work—that focus on insecurity, the feeling that the boat is shaky, the sea is rough, the environment unfriendly.

Green is a level that we all experience at different times since we all go through feelings of insecurity and of heartfelt love, but it is the overriding, nurturing, Mother Earth quality that makes one predominantly a green level person. Another attribute can be the intensity of the energy, but that intensity, without self-mastery, can also drag one into the pits. My problem is that the swings between the two poles can be tremendous. I feel compassion when other people express pain or sorrow, with a depth of feeling I can reach out to them and be at one. But that same passion, fed by the fires of insecurity and need, can turn back in on me and make my own pain more intense, and more intense, and more intense, until I feel like I'm going to shatter into a million pieces and never be whole again.

LOVE

In a love relationship people like me can display these same extremes. If the nest feels secure we can be warm and giving and expressing great love from the heart. But if it doesn't, if we feel that our man or woman is running around with somebody else, we go into that negative green spin and become a sick bundle of fear, with insecurity, jealousy and doubt gnawing at our insides. We are literally "green with envy". We become possessive and clinging in these relationships.

All of us must deal with our green level when we are presented with love situations in our lives. And fear, along with a basic mistrust in the rightness of the universe, are the pivotal emotions that will dictate whether we will radiate love and warmth or be clouded with a sickly negative aura that makes us look "green at the gills". The effectiveness with which we probe our deep emotional being and clean out the insecurities so that we can become trusting in God's will, will dictate the extent to which our lives will be tenuous and empty or joyful and fulfilled.

TIME

Green level people can operate in all time worlds, depending on our state of security or insecurity. If we have a job with good pay and all is going well in the present we can relate to this time frame of past, present and future quite happily. But if our boss expresses a criticism and we feel our job is threatened we immediately skip into the future as though it were now and imagine ourselves fired, distraught and out of money, winding up on Skid Row!

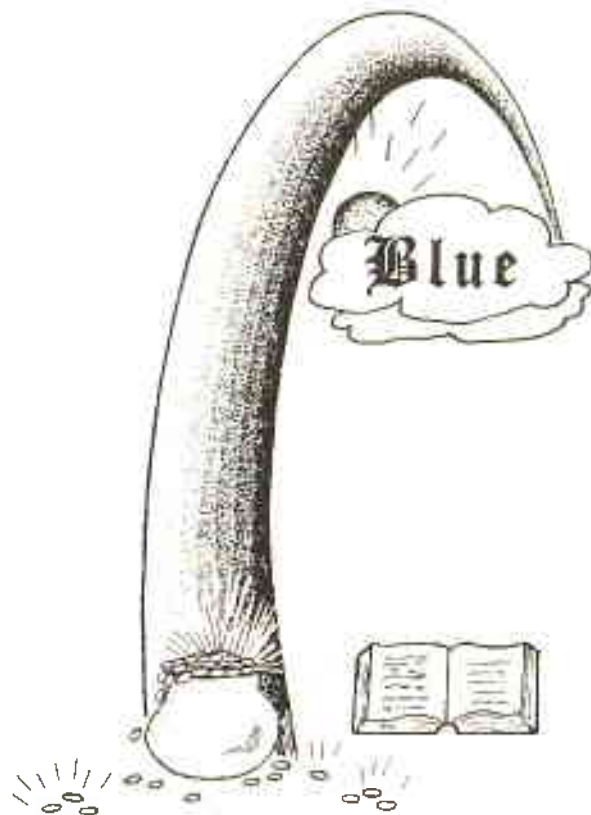

On the other hand we can reminisce with fondness about the walk in the woods we had with our good friend last week, we can feel great joy and communion listening to a moving piece of music right now, and we can feel the bubble of expectancy when we know we'll be seeing a loved one for dinner tomorrow night. But if we lose a loved one we immediately flip into negative states of sorrow and try to make the past become the present by indulging in heavy nostalgia, by savoring all our memories, photographs and mementos.

—Ary King

Bruce's blue level devotion shines out of his eyes as he looks up at the Pieta in the campus garden.

Living in my blue level has usually been very peaceful and certain, full of nostalgic memories, heroes to admire and emulate, high ideals and definite concepts of truth. Of course if any of those heroes or concepts or ideals gets challenged then I become a little less peaceful and if I cannot find certainty then I become disturbed until I do find it. When I was growing up, my heroes were Thoreau, Martin Luther King, and Gandhi. When I was fifteen years old, I would write sayings from Gandhi in my looseleaf notebook and when I got bored with the class, I would flip back to the notebook and think about truth and nonviolence and noninjury to living things. I wasn't practicing them, but they were lovely things to think about. I was very idealistic about the peace movement and the War. Part of that was that I had two older brothers who went off to the War. I had a brother wounded in Viet Nam and that affected me quite a lot and I stopped saluting the flag. I was president of the class and I was also flag bearer, which signified that I was one of the top students, so there was a big turmoil when I didn't want to salute the flag.

About the same time I got involved with an interracial group. Our town was lily white and very affluent. We were only ten miles from Newark which was mostly black and very poor and destitute. In our high school we had a group that tried to reach out and establish contacts with the black community. I got involved with that because it was sort of an idea of brotherhood and I was very inspired by Martin Luther King. I was always looking for some ideal or concept to hang on to. I felt very strongly that there was a gap, a big hole in some part of me, and I didn't know how to fill it, so I would look for someone's idea of how to fill it. I'd get someone's concepts that sounded right and I'd become those concepts for awhile. I would try different dietary things and I'd have a set of rules that would make you healthy forever.

One of my uncertainties was a very strong fear of death that came on when I was about sixteen. I was playing on a baseball team and I'd be out on the field, thinking, "What is death? Is death the end?" I was playing first base and it was like the shadow was lurking behind me. I remember talking to my mother about it quite a bit and she had such a strong vibration of faith that that kind of eased it. But even when I was very young, it troubled me. When I was about four or five years old I would go to bed at night and be afraid. I remember one night when I was going to bed, I prayed, "God, please make me either be Jesus or immortal," because I was afraid of dying and I would think, "Why would I come now and have to die and that would be the end of it all?"

I was always very confused about what God was and as soon as I started reading people like Thoreau and Gandhi and some Chinese poetry, I started getting their sense of what God was. Thoreau talked about the "immanence in the woods," a sort of omnipresence. So I started to relate to God as sort of a feeling or a presence. Thoreau really changed my life more than anything. I would go outside at twilight. We lived in the woods and I'd just go and look at the sky and look at the trees and feel something that I never had felt before, that "immanence" he referred to. Thoreau was a Transcendentalist and I didn't even know what that was, but the whole idea of "transcending" sounded wonderful. So I related to Thoreau's way of looking at God and Nature for quite awhile and that filled the gap, and later on someone else's idea would feel right and I'd try that one. A perfect example, even more recent, is Nuclear Evolution. When I was done reading it, I felt such a loss, like "I'm done! What do I do now?" So I started reading it again. I felt a tremendous gap in my life when I finished with it, because I'd been spending every day with this book. I was in "The Fantasticks" on Broadway and I'd take it to the theater and tell my friends about it and every day I'd have at least an hour or two to spend reading it and re-reading and underlining. When I was done with it, I didn't know where to go next. It was a little while before I realized that the only thing for me to do was to go to California and practice Nuclear Evolution with the people who were dedicated to doing it. And that's why I am here now at the University of the Trees, right at the source of all that wisdom that stirred me so deeply. Oddly enough, the whole way of life here is built on following one's own authority and not living life by external authorities at all. And the way of life is change, which is also very hard on a blue level person. The last thing that blue level people want is change. Our strongest need is to maintain our inner peace without changing. "Don't rock the boat!" we scream inside our guarded world of concepts and stored memories. When a new idea enters this blue world of ours, we reflect on it, mull it over, compare it to some past experience we've had, or to some historical authority, and then, if necessary, fit it neatly into our overall conception of the world, which never changes. We live in the past, which to us is clearly-defined and certain. We love to make a point by quoting the scriptures or famous poetry or leading experts to support our opinion of things and reinforce our rigid ideas about the world. We'd much rather be left in peace with our memories of the romantic past or with our lofty ideals about utopia or world peace than have to get into an argument over them. We're pretty set in our ways, so if it is not absolutely necessary for us to change or to accept a new idea, to be honest with you, we'd rather not bother.

Now there are some very positive aspects to being blue. We can be "true blue" in our loyalty to family, friends or to an idea that inspires us. Devotion is the key for us blue people, whether it is devotion to keeping the skies and the oceans blue and free from pollution, or devotion to the growth of every living thing on this blue jewel of a planet, or devotion to God, the One source of all the colors of the rainbow, or even devotion to developing that conceptual part of ourselves into a creative tool for clear communicating. We look for an authoritative truth toward which to dedicate our lives, but we also want to be an authority ourself, because we assume that other people must be looking, too, and so maybe they will look at life our way.

In about eighth or ninth grade, I was still involved with the church and the youth group and church choir and things like that, and I remember telling my aunt that I wanted to be a minister some day. But I didn't know what church. I just had a desire to teach or to spread some kind of message. Today my image of myself is someone who is disciplined and knowledgeable in many areas and can answer any question—sort of an authority on a lot of different things or at least with enough knowledge to sound like one.

Only lately am I beginning to realize that my tendency to want to be a "supersaint" and always to seem peaceful and cool and collected is not entirely honest, since there really are things going on inside me that I don't express. My main problem in communication is my inability to share at the time what I am feeling. With the blue level, there is always a delay, because we take time to process and get in touch with our feelings. Only the voice betrays that there is turmoil happening inside. It trembles with emotion, perhaps because the throat chakra is the seat of the blue level of consciousness.

Partly because of this problem with processing my feelings, I have communication problems with Joanne, my yellow level girlfriend. She has a different idea of communication and is quicker than I am to realize that we are not communicating very well. She says to me, "If you get into my world and realize how my mind works, all you have to do is say to me, 'Where are you?' and I will say, 'I'm in the first item on my list, my number one—communication.' " But it is hard for me to get into her world because it is totally foreign to me. I wish she weren't so analytical sometimes; she seems so impulsive to me. I just want to mellow out, while she's running around asking all kinds of questions, taking things apart and generally destroying my peace. But I'm also beginning to see the effect I have on her—my unwillingness to change and be flexible, expecting her to live up to my concepts of an ideal mate, or having such a fixed idea of her that I refuse to see that she has changed. I am having to learn how to let her be whatever she is. The whole quality of our relationship here at the University of the Trees is three hundred-sixty degrees different from New York. She brought up to me the other night a serious problem in our relationship that we need to work on and her whole vibe was that she had really absorbed some important feedback from people and she was coming to me sharing her heart about it. That never happened before we moved here. First of all it never happened that she would get feedback from people that she would have wanted to bring to me. And if she had, it would have felt to me like an attack, though from her point of view it wouldn't have been. What I could feel was that she had been deeply affected by what the people had said and by how much care they were showing to her.

In New York we didn't have any friends that were that insightful, so the feedback they would give us wasn't that helpful. To most of our friends in New York, we were either on a pedestal or we were really strange to be giving up theater and coming out to a community in California, so either people were revering us too much or saying we were weirdos. So we couldn't really get too much from either group. But here it is totally different and I can see how strongly Joanne is affected by the caring of people and their desire to see how she's doing and how we are doing, and I really feel that. It is nice to see the change it has caused in her.

Although the essence of what is happening here is change, which normally disturbs the blue level, I am beginning to feel uncomfortable with the limits of the blue level and to glimpse the tremendous growth that is possible when people are open to change.

LOVE

Love on the blue level is devotion. I'll see someone doing something or relating or sharing something and I'll feel so glad I'm their friend or I'll really feel committed to being their friend. Around here, when I see people who are really dedicated, I see a certain something in them and it makes a different part of me well up, a devotional side. Around the time when the book Rise of the Phoenix was about to go off to the printer, I saw how different people were putting in so much time and love and being devoted to what the final result could bring to us and to everyone, and that gave me a lot of joy.

TIME

When I was in high school I joined a pacifist organization that my parents belonged to, but it wasn't just the philosophy that appealed to me. I loved the feeling that it was something that had been going on for years. It was established, and I liked the feeling that there was some solidity to it. I used to have a fear of the future, an anxiety, not knowing what the future was going to bring. I wasn't secure in allowing it to happen, so I started to get a little anxious about what might happen, and I'd be afraid of possibilities or the unknown. But in the last couple of years I've identified with the future and am looking ahead and eager for the future to happen—or the idealized future, I should say. The part of me that is blue is the part that likes to talk about the past and enjoys reminiscing. Recently Joanne and I were standing near the beautiful blue Pacific Ocean enjoying a particularly beautiful sunset, when I said to her, "Doesn't this sunset remind you of that night in Durango, Colorado?" My blue level memory was not content with just experiencing the beauty of that moment but had to compare it to a memory of other beauty. It is hard to enjoy things now when you are living in the past.

Patrick Henry summed up the feeling of most blue levels when he said, "I have but one lamp by which my feet are guided, and that lamp is the lamp of experience. I know of no way of judging the future but by the past." It is hard for me to see that this statement is not true for other levels of consciousness and that the future doesn't need to have anything to do with past history. But my reality is based so much on my past experiences and memories of feelings that it is hard for me to accept that these are only subjective.

—Bruce Cryer

Phil has cultivated the indigo intuitive faculty and will tell you about it in the pages that follow. Later he explains how the pendulum can be used to amplify the intuitive messages.

If you could be in my world and follow me around for one morning you'd have a wonderful example of how the indigo intuitive level works. It would probably start with me sitting in the office, calling on the phone trying to track down Michael, my fellow worker in the tool department. No success at all, nobody knows where Michael is, and then the next minute, presto—he walks in the office door—a materialization of the mental message I was projecting.

Then I might be heading home for lunch and for some reason, as I'm walking along, thoughts of my Mom and Dad pop into my mind. I arrive home and am half way through my meal when the phone rings—who else but Mom and Dad, calling from Ohio. Seems they've been thinking about me all morning and want to check in with me and see how

I'm doing

My world is magical that way, for the person on the indigo level functions much of the time beyond the senses of sight, hearing, touch, smell and taste and moves in that amorphous level of the "super-sense". "Spaced-out" is an expression that people often use to describe us since we drift along with our feet not quite planted on the ground. We have trouble living in the now. For us only the future is real, so we live there, where endless possibilities flow into our awareness.

This makes us especially receptive to the kind of experience we call "hunches". All of us have had them at different times, but the difference for the indigo level person is that the world of the "hunch" is the one that's real for us, rather than being a place of tenuous and uncharted waters. Having had hunches yourself, you know that they have nothing to do with the rational world of the intellect. For example, you might have heard through a friend about a potential business partner he is considering and so you have a lot of facts in your head and in a yellow level intellectual way think you "know" that person already. But then you meet him, and you get a funny, unexplainable "vibe" that negates all the things the friend told you in terms of his trustworthiness. He has a big smile on his face and is saying all the right things, but your intuition is telling you something different. That is the indigo level at work and if you're really attuned, the "hunches" always turn out to be true.

Because we live so much in this dreamy space it can give us a lot of problems in terms of meeting our everyday, concrete responsibilities. "I'm going to..." is the indigo theme song. And this can be one of our worst negative traits—that our manifestation often does not match our words. In our world, if we say we'll do something, we're experiencing the vision in our heads of its being done, and therefore it is done.

But in the real world, for the person we've made the promises to, the squeaky door is still not oiled, the spare tire hasn't been patched, and the vegetable garden out back is full of weeds. They're hopping mad at us and we can't understand why! "Well, I told you I'm going to do it," we say. Thus our relationships are not always harmonious but we don't despair, because for us "It's going to be better." The future is where we put our trust. So we don't accept responsibility for our situation and would rather dream of some utopia than deal with our messes right now.

Being in this visionary world, we indigo types sometimes hurt our friends without even knowing it. We can become so spaced out and enraptured by our own inner world that when someone is talking to us we don't hear a word they're saying. (Maybe that's the reason why our memory is so bad; we don't listen in the first place.) And so when our orange and green level friends want to make heart contact with us we're not fully there to make contact with them. Worse yet, we're usually late for the appointments we've made with them because we don't remember our promises.

But this dreamy space can get us into even more serious trouble than that. Yesterday as I was beginning to write this section of the book I put on a pot of water for tea and then got to work at the desk in my room next to the kitchen. I became immersed in the vision of seeing the book completed, in the hands of the public, being heartily read and responded to. As usual, I had no concept of time and so had no idea how long I had been sitting there. Suddenly my dreams were shattered by my roommate bursting through the door in an agitated state. "My god, there's a pot burning up on the stove! Did you put it on there?" The tea water! I had completely forgotten about it and what's more, I hadn't even smelled the pot burning even though I was right in the next room! I was so taken over by my inner world and so preoccupied with my dreams that I lost my sense of the outer world, lost my sense of smell and my house almost burned up right under my nose.

Despite these horrendous events which are too often part of our lives, there are ways that this intuitive level can be used positively. For example, I can solve a problem in ten seconds flat by seeing a solution that no one else can. Recently I was having trouble getting a metal hinge glued to a piece of plastic on an instrument I was making. None of the glues I tried would work, so I got disgusted and gave up. When I let go of the gluing idea in my mind (blue level), I saw the solution like a light bulb going off in my head. All I had to do was heat the metal hinge with a soldering iron and it melted into the plastic for a good, strong fit. I didn't need to use any glue at all. All I needed was to stop being mentally glued to the idea and listen to my intuition.

Listening is very important at this level. The ability to listen inwardly also is an essential ingredient in dowsing or divining, since in essence it enables us to cut through to the truth of the situation. The intellectual wants to use logical reasoning to find the answer to a question, but the intuitive person just "knows", even though he doesn't know how he knows. This ability is usually attributed to women rather than men, although the potential lies equally in all of us. But we often hear the story of the husband who wants to invest in a certain stock, has read all the investment reports and stock market forecasts and so is sure in his decision to do it now. His wife, not understanding much about business, says, "I feel somehow that you should wait a few months. I can't really tell you why, but I just feel it in my bones." The rational, yellow level husband is frustrated that she can't give him the reasons why and so he goes along with his investment, feeling superior in his knowledge. Then a month later the Iranian government confiscates all American oil interests in Iran and the American stock market plummets to its deepest low in decades. How did the "little woman" know when all the experts didn't? Well, it can't be explained rationally, but maybe her husband will listen next time!

LOVE

The indigo experience of love is bound up with a desire to expand the limits of the self to infinity, to break through the boundaries imposed by the love drives of the previous five lower levels. This desire for expansion is linked with a deep aesthetic sensitivity to the beauty, order and miraculous nature of the universe. In its positive expression this can lead to feelings of awe, wonder and rapture. It can also spark a sincere desire to serve others in some selfless way. It can manifest in negative ways, however, if there is a desire to escape from the unpleasant or unbeautiful instead of doing something about it.

So we indigo types often are unwilling to work on the "nitty gritty" ups and downs and interpersonal conflicts that must be cut through, expressed and resolved to make a relationship with a loved one work. And this is the real test for the indigo type in order to reach his highest expression—to bring this heightened supersensitivity into a tangible manifestation rather than to "trip out" on it or repress it. Only then will the indigo experience the true bliss of oneness in the here and now.

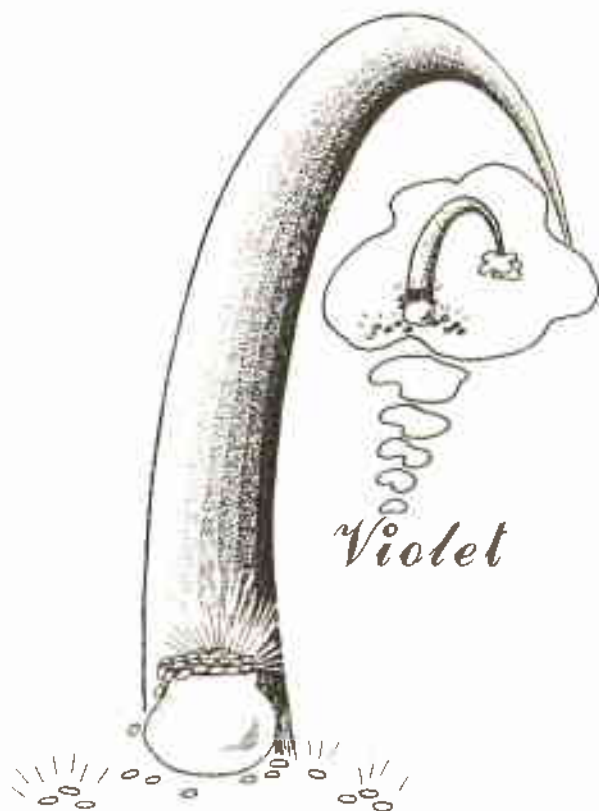

TIME

Future, future, future! with the past dead and gone and the present so fleeting that it can only be experienced with great self-discipline, or under duress.

—Phil Allen

Sibyl lives in the wonderland of the imaginative violet level

Violet is the world of the imagination and of unconnected, illogical images, magic and whim. It is the cosmic connection that pulls rabbits out of hats, paintings out of canvases, bodies out of clay, universes out of darkness, and creation out of the void; it snatches reality out of "nowhere". It is the channel of vision that exists outside of time and space in its own world—the world of dreams and mental visualization.

A lot of my motivation to be in this space comes from a strong desire to commune with the spiritual universe of stars and turtle eggs and to share the same bliss and joy and wonder on earth that I see in my dreams.

My life is highlighted by images. I get a feeling of instant joy from the divine order of life—the way things are put together. Just all in a flash—the way someone is standing, compared to someone else, a subtle glance with a particular picture hanging right next to them, the way the weather comes just as certain events are over or just beginning, a contract between two people under some intertwining flowers, a sliver of a moon when I'm feeling empty or a full-blown one when I've been talking all day, the way the sun comes out on the flowers. The rerun description never quite matches the original feeling. Hearing or reading about moments of bliss doesn't bring back the same feeling. I always want to stretch those fleeting moments of divine experience when I'm feeling at one with the universe and then crawl inside, zip it up and hum with it. The flip side to this is the images of fear and doubt. Since violet is the level of dreams, it is also the level of nightmares—the black clouds that hover in the back of the mind or roll forward and obliterate the landscape altogether. In this negative violet space, I doubt all positive images and everywhere I look I see failure and rejection. My pumped up dreams and images of who I am are all reduced to rubble.

To those of us on the violet level, images often come quite unexpectedly and are so vivid that they seem even more real than the material world. My images are sometimes inspiration, sometimes solutions to practical problems, like how to arrange a room or a garden, and sometimes shocking, like a lurid flash of sexual fantasy totally out of context. Sometimes it feels like I am standing on an invisible dock and feel a jarring bump as if a small boat has arrived. I turn around to "look" and there is the image—visual or metaphoric or musical or whatever. Other times it just flows in and out as an integral part of me, just like memories and sensory information and feelings. It is a kind of etheric sense of knowing, like wonder and awe and surprise all rolled together, like, we feel a lot as children. Usually we lose faith and stop acknowledging it as we grow older, instead of developing the creative imagination like we do the intellect and memory. My imaginative experience varies depending on how open I am to it.

It is a lot of fun climbing into other realities, but it is difficult for those who are depending on me, hard for them to count on me for anything, because I am so reluctant to throw on the cold water, wake up and get organized. Since dreams can have whatever ending I want, I assume this to be true in other realities and have very little fear of consequences. Only when I experience the consequences do I feel any urgency to change. One time I was driving some friends to the early morning flea market and one of them pointed out that my gas gauge was on "empty" (it spends a lot of its time there). She suggested we go to her house where she had a five gallon can of gas. I replied that everything was okay; we'd make it. I didn't want to face up to dealing with the smelly sloppy gasoline and service of the truck. I just wanted to float on down to the flea market. I was feeling good and didn't want to break the spell. A couple of miles down the road the truck ran out of gas. As I hitched back to town to get the five gallon can, my friends were picked up by another friend and driven down to the market. While I walked home alone in the cold morning air, I had plenty of time to reflect on many of these incidents in my life.

Those of us who resonate on the violet chakra are said to walk around with our "head in the clouds", which makes sense since that is where we get our prime input, but between creative moments violet people can be very spaced out and impractical, not well grounded. It is sometimes very difficult for us to relate to the rest of the world which doesn't understand and gets impatient since we often communicate in isolated metaphors, interminable questions (why is the sky blue?) and flashes of unconnected dialogue.

rather than clear, linear, well-structured information. Sometimes our communication is only a vacant stare. When I am talking to someone on the blue level, I get the feeling they think they are babysitting me. My blue level friends enjoy being the authority and have a certain managerial air, whereas I like to look at the amazingness of everything and ask a lot of questions (how does this work? why can't you see the moon spinning?). I like to think of life as an unending mystery with little doors leading to sages pointing to other doors leading to hexagrams indicating other doors opening to challenges resolving to other doors leading to God. All magic. Always just beyond comprehension. So my blue friend sees all these places to fill with blue ideals and concepts and opinions and blue practical answers and so feels important. The violet question mark finds a blue answer. But I want to find someone who will answer all the questions with deeper questions, to keep me in that wonder-space of our imaginations.

Sometimes my violet dreams seem extraordinary compared to the nitty-gritty reality of now, and the experience of this gap between the chaotic jumble of colorful jigsaw pieces and the whole picture of the desired image brings on feelings of self-doubt, so that nothing gets done. My violet world remains a private one and I begin to feel unappreciated. The images come in, flourish for a moment and then dissolve, like a private movie, and unless I develop other methods of communication, the images fade without being communicated. A violet person perceives life through images, knowing through flashes of illumination, often just when the head has been wrestling with something it wanted to express, tossing and turning, viewing and rejecting different ways of saying, trying to get to the meat of it, the core, the kernel, but being pulled off into side trips and fantasies, diluting the penetration. During this chaos, the subtle shadow of knowing is always present but cannot be released until it is illuminated. Then suddenly the gate is lifted and you burst out of your head with the thing you needed to express.

We violet people have a chore to do. No matter how creative we think we are, for that creativity to have any expression or meaning requires the humility of seeing it for what it is, being willing to work on it and structure it. A whim is worthless. I often see my whims and notions as being absolute crown jewels. Then on a second look they seem to be worthless. The violet reality is where we have the most freedom of expression. It is a totally receptive and plastic space but, in order to manifest and communicate these images, we have to work through all the limitations of the other levels. So if the violet person hasn't developed the confidence and will to set his or her visions in motion, that unfulfilled imagination can turn sour and fill the mind with cheap TV-type fantasies just for entertainment, confusing this with the real creative imagination. The power of communication is short-circuited by the kiddie-charge of switching on fantasy land. It becomes a small spin cycle whirling around the ego with none of the God-inspiration of the true imagination. So this is where the real struggle comes in. In the same way that Einstein described genius as being one percent inspiration and ninety-nine percent perspiration, the task of communicating from the violet level of consciousness often seems to be a lot of hard work.

For me, this spaced out way of living causes a lack of completeness in my manifestation as if what I do is just the shadow of the complete task. My approach to a project isn't sequential with a beginning, middle and end; there is no responsible overview or impact on time. It seems more like interacting for a short time with no sense of time passing—not one moment linked to another in a row but just a spot somewhere in time. Often I'll drift away from something before I've really completed anything, although I'll think I've completed it, since it seemed the time to leave, but whatever I was doing may not in fact be completed. Sometimes I don't realize this until it is pointed out by others and then I can see the ragged edges and the lack of thoroughness and caring and I realize that only ten percent was there when I was doing it and the other ninety percent was floating around somewhere in the universe, so when I get feedback that I've made mistakes, I'm often shocked, since it seemed like such a simple job; I can't understand how I could have erred.

Those of us living in the violet band of consciousness can be very charming, almost childlike, because our fertile imagination keeps us spiritually limber. But it can be most exasperating to try to do business with us, as we act evasive and resistant to dealing with a concrete problem. Some of the charm is developed by necessity, to ward off the scorn of those who see the gaps in our practicality and lack of material success. Excuses for being late or forgetful are embellished with jokes, poetry and dance to secure the much needed love of disapproving friends.

LOVE

When I open to loving someone, I experience through their eyes a sense of eternal love, where the identity of the person, the time, the environment, the conversational nature of the relating all slips away and only the two souls remain that have known each other as one, eternally. For those of us who live on the seventh level to find satisfaction in a relationship is a rare experience. We are always seeking something higher—a oneness with Nature—a perfect communion with God. Sometimes I get subtle glimpses of a pure love that seems so far away from the actual relationship but I won't accept the responsibility to bridge the gap between the image and the reality. When I look into a person's eyes I can see through the channel of my heart the Eternal One that I played with in another lifetime, the dream image, the god-like total honesty and love, and I feel at one; there is no separation and I experience the sweetness of rain and innocence. But then my ego comes in and starts to doubt the earthly reality of the experience and, in so doing, opens the door to fear and rigidity and separation.

TIME

I tend to be late for everything. I'll just expand whatever I'm doing and will not move on to something else until I absolutely have to. My energy will initially be focused but soon begins to dissipate, becoming more and more diffuse until I'm in a dream and then have to "snap to" and check the clock. Other times, when time and I are on mutually cooperative terms, I can get tons of tightly packed, smooth flowing things done in the tiniest amount of time and I'm just amazed—as if the time stopped for awhile, just out of love, to give me a chance to catch up, and I reconfirm my belief in magic and see that the Cosmos is flexible and responds to what I do with my consciousness. So time itself does not seem very real to me. It expands and contracts like bubble gum while the unsuspecting clock ticks doggedly by. This feeling that the will can alter time can work negatively too: leaving late for an appointment, hoping that the time it takes to get there will become magically malleable, not accepting that it won't until I've arrived and the people whom I've kept waiting are looking unmagically annoyed.

—Sibyl Greene

WHERE ARE YOU IN THE RAINBOW?

The following questionnaire may now help you to review the different levels and how you relate to them:

1. RED

- a) Am I using my physical energy and my practicality to manifest and complete projects?
- b) Am I reacting and being pulled every which way by one stimulus after another to the point of exhaustion?

2. ORANGE

- a) Am I relating to other people as members of a "family" that I can nourish and serve?
- b) Am I frustrated in my ambitions and desperately trying to make it up the social ladder?

3. YELLOW

- a) Am I using my intellect to penetrate the truth of every situation?
- b) Do I use my intellect to analyze and quibble and separate so that my plans do not materialize and I judge others?

4. GREEN

- a) Am I loving people and the good things of life without attachment?
- b) Do I live in fear that what I am enjoying now may be taken from me tomorrow?

5. BLUE

- a) Have I found true devotion to the highest within myself and in all life?
- b) Are my ideals pinned to authorities other than my own, so that I live in the past?

6. INDIGO

- a) Am I using my intuition to tune into truth so that I can act with skill?
- b) Am I always chasing my dreams and never manifesting them or enjoying the present?

7. VIOLET

- a) Am I using my imagination to produce beautiful and positive results, either in creative works or in transforming my own self-image and changing my life and the life around me?
- b) Am I allowing myself to give in to my own fantasies so that my imagination controls me more than I control it? Am I content to create images without bringing them into reality?

If you have answered "Yes" to any of the (a) questions then these are your strong areas where you are using your consciousness positively. If you have answered "Yes" to any of the (b) questions this will tell you where you are functioning negatively and where changes have to be made so that you can be happy and fulfilled.

While you were answering the questions you will have discovered that one or two were easier to respond to than others. These are your normal ways of functioning. But if you gave answers to the less familiar, you have been in touch with areas of potential not yet explored. It is important to go back now and to note where you felt most "at home" and where least. We all have the power within us to live one hundred percent positively on all seven levels, but most of us are still only working toward this state. Ask yourself right now what undiscovered country within yourself you most want to develop and cultivate. Where do you want to start? Are you an intellectual, wanting to explore the blue world of devotion? Or are you a conservative blue level person longing to be free of your fixed concepts and reach into the indigo's uncertain but thrilling territory of intuitive knowing? Are you perhaps living in the violet world of a thousand images that needs some of the red level's power to manifest?

Wherever you are in this rainbow world there are always new places to go, new skills and potential to develop, new ways to relate and communicate, new ways to express your love.

A CHART OF THE SEVEN LEVELS

Color & Chakra	Positive Expression	Negative Expression	Time World	Deepest Needs	Profession	Biggest Challenge
RED Physical Base of Spine	Active Sensory Spontaneous Sexual Manifesting Practical	Reactive/Aggressive Sensual Impulsive Obsessively sexual Bullying	Now	Physical contact Intense activity Sensory gratification	Cowboy Boxer/Wrestler Construction Worker Logger Dancer All action oriented professions	To sense beyond the senses To plan before action To be receptive
ORANGE Social Spleen	Humanitarian Ambitious Hospitable Expansive Optimistic Warm Competitive Altruistic	Selfishly proud Superficial Mistrustful Power seeking Anti-social Ostentatious Social climbing Politically manipulative	Do now for the future	Social contact and acceptance in group or family Respect and good reputation	Diplomat Social Worker Personnel Officer Politician Hostess Tour Guide Stewardess Receptionist	To belong to the family of man through love and service To make deeper contacts
YELLOW Intellectual Solar Plexus	Logical Analytical Creative Flexible Eloquent Intensely self-aware Methodical Expressive Precise Efficient in planning and organization	Critical Nit-picky Contradictory Schizophrenic Verbose Egotistical Judgmental Separative Verbally aggressive Unable to feel	Linear: Past to present to future	To live in an orderly world To express heightened sense of individuality To shine intellectually To understand	Teacher Market Analyst Mathematician Engineer Psychiatrist Inventor Computer Programmer Technical Writer Psychologist Planner	To end separation and merge with the One in all To discover the heart To have a conflict-free relationship

Color & Chakra	Positive Expression	Negative Expression	Time World	Deepest Needs	Profession	Biggest Challenge
GREEN Security Heart	Generous Vital Powerful Secure Open hearted Nurturing Self-assertive Compassionate Expansive	Miserly Depleted Self-doubting Insecure Possessive/jealous Selfish Attached Envious Mistrustful of life	Moves between past, present and future seeking confirmation and security	To feel certain and secure To feel assertive and powerful To love and be loved To save up	Florist Gardener Healer Banker Veterinarian Forest Ranger Realtor	To love without attachment To conquer possessiveness To master doubt, fear, mistrust and insecurity
BLUE Conceptual Throat	Content Idealistic Patient and enduring Nostalgic Committed Devotional Peaceful Synthesizing Authoritative Loyal	Smug and self-satisfied Dogmatic Resistant to change Melancholic Fanatic Authority-seeking Rigid Authoritarian Ultra-conservative Slow to respond	Past	To attain inner peace To find mental security To live an ideal	Scientist Religious Leader Teacher Historian Missionary	To find truth and confirmation within rather than from others To let go of memories and live spontaneously in the moment To conquer self-righteousness To risk

INDIGO Intuition Brow	Supersensitive Visionary Far-seeing Aesthetic Abstract Inspired Telepathic Trusting of future Able to tune into inner world of others	Inefficient Unable to live in the now Spaced-out Forgetful Fearful of future Undisciplined Introverted Always late Misguidedly futuristic Unable to manifest	Future	To feel at one with the Universe To have a conflict-free relationship To be out front of human developments	Diviner Psychic Parapsychologist Prophet Advisor Promotor Actor	To make real the vision of the future To manifest To refine the supersense
VIOLET Imagination Crown	Creative Charming Has sense of wonder and mystical instinct for divine order Has power of transformation	Has negative self-image Daydreamy Critical	Past, present and future	To bring order out of chaos Sympathy and tenderness Eternal communion with the Universe Annihilation of time	Artist Musician Writer Designer Architect	To be disciplined in manifestation To transform the self-image with the power of the imagination

When Christopher describes, in the pages that follow, what it means to perfect all the seven rainbow levels, he is talking from his own experience of life and research into consciousness. He does not ask us to do what he has not done himself.

PERFECTING THE SEVEN LEVELS

Every Friday night, here at the University of the Trees, we meet together to meditate, chant and probe into the questions that are concerning us at that time. Christopher answers our questions and we share an evening of spiritual exploration with any guests who wish to join us.

What follows now is a transcription of Christopher's answer to a question put to him by one of his students.

Question: We are all working towards the discovery of our rainbow body by slowly untangling the network of all our karmic patterns that keep us from radiating the purity of the particular color levels that we are living on, and my question is, what is the pure form of each of those color levels, or what would be the highest expression of each of the seven levels of consciousness, and is there some crucial change that we have to make in order to manifest that highest level, or some spiritual challenge that each particular level has to master in order to break through to that pure love?

Christopher: In order for each level of consciousness to experience the height of its own perfection, the challenge is to master the lowest form of that level of consciousness. So we have to talk about the lower expression; we have to be aware of it or beware of it. Often we are not even aware that we function on different levels of consciousness. Once having discovered them, we can begin to see how they affect one another, so that an impurity at one level pulls down the vibration of the other levels. Therefore, to refine awareness at any level will automatically clarify and open up the other levels, thus lifting the entire consciousness until ultimately the full spectrum of the rainbow manifests in us as the white light of pure consciousness.

RED

We begin with the physical level—the instincts, the desires of the flesh. What is it that pulls us down into the flesh? The physical manifestation of the whole body depends on the urge to replicate itself or the sexual drive, which, if it obsesses us, is going to color everything else on the higher levels as well as the lower levels, because if all we can think of is our greedy appetite for sex, and if that dominates our life, then naturally our body cells are going to be pulled down as a vehicle of expression, since that is the ultimate selfishness, in a way. Not that sex itself is not beautiful, but an undue attachment to it causes a craving in the body that subjugates everything else to that self-centered craving, and if that craving is not mastered, then our spiritual life is pulled down. Sex pulls us down because we overindulge in it and then we feel guilty about misusing our appetites.

Often an indulgent person is someone who gets fat or eats too much, who always has their finger in the refrigerator, and you could say this is a compensation for that sex drive. You know you're eating all those sweets and cookies and that you shouldn't because you're already bulging out at the seams, and you know that every one of those sweets is going to put on more weight, but your hand goes impulsively or compulsively into the bag, because the chewing and the occupation with sweets and sugar is merely a compensation for the selfish craving at another level. If you had a satisfactory sex life, you might not have that craving. The indulgence is compensation for something you are not getting, so the compensation makes you feel complete. Now this same indulgent drive or craving can happen on other levels. That is, this craving can be there on all the seven levels, so it has to be mastered at each level. Also on the physical level of consciousness is the other urge or drive of self-preservation which is the origin of that fear which causes the drive of flight or the impulse to fight, which is anger. To preserve the physical body, we either fight or we flee, and these are two very important things we have to master on the physical level—to gain mastery over that fear of flight and to gain mastery over the impulse to fight.

What is the highest expression of this red level? It is not to deny yourself sexual activity but to garner the force of creativity that is inherent in sexuality. The more sexual power you've got, the more potent you are for raising consciousness. So the idea is not to kill that potency but to raise it up to its full potential. And similarly, with the instincts for self-preservation—the desire to run away from things or the alternative to face up and fight with violence whatever we think is in our way. What is the answer to that? The answer to that is to become aware of what that does to us, how it pulls us down into an animal life in the sense that we become reactive people, reacting to situations instead of being in control of ourself. We run or we turn and fight. But the challenge is to discover that there is a middle ground between these red level actions, namely the decision to stay put, in a state where we can still fight, yet without fighting. We can still be cautious enough to know when to run, but we do not run out of fear. We keep out of harm's way, knowing the danger, not fearing needlessly but knowing when to fear. You see, if you had no fear at all, you'd be a fool. Not to fear where angels fear to tread, or not to understand the real danger of a situation, is how people get themselves chopped down, murdered and what have you, before they have had a chance to achieve what they are here for. So your challenge could be to master those two drives so that you study the reactions of fight and flight inside yourself and try to arrive at how you can be poised in the world and still fight, but from within. Then you are still around to continue the work in the body. If Christ came back in a human body at this time, would he go and get himself crucified, knowing full well how we have made the crucifixion a symbol of death when he intended it as a symbol of mastering life? What would Christ be saying now? He'd say, "This time I had better try to stick around long enough to do something, because if I come out and do what I did last time, I'll be on a cross again." Thus inside him would reside truth but the truth would not perhaps be confronting openly the ultimate powers of the land; it would be more subtle, because to become a focus of political energies really wouldn't serve much purpose.

If we think about that, we can steer a straight course between falsity and truth, a course that is not devious but is direct. How can we steer straight between all these feelings that pull us this way and that way? The highest challenge of the physical level is how to remain in a body and not be pulled around this way and that by fear and flight or fight or sexual greed or appetite. Then for the next phase, to manifest in a body in the highest levels of consciousness, we need a willing body. We need to be able to build things with it, just as through beautiful dedication and devotion, the monks and masons have built cathedrals, put the physical bricks there. But to create their social ideal they have to be in a body in order to build with bricks and stone, the same way we have a body to do physical work, planting trees and making beauty around us, planting flowers and creating that beauty in combination with the cosmic forces. So that is the highest expression of the physical body, to make it a tool, to make it a servant that is able to work for its Master.

ORANGE

The orange level goal would be to take that same idea to a higher level in relationships with our fellow man. That is, how do you get outside your skin? Once having conquered physical greed and conquered the fear of flight, how do we then, on the next level of consciousness, the social level, look at the lowest expression and the highest? The lowest, of course would be to use society as a means of gaining power or for our own pleasure, converting our fellow men into slaves or in some way abusing them or by using social energies and social wealth for selfish ends, using what belongs to the many for the few, polluting the atmosphere of our fellow men, robbing them of the right to breathe fresh air through our own selfish actions. Another low thing would be to leave our own dirt for others to clear up, whatever kind it is.

If we choose to live with others and we use the lives of others and the resources of others for selfish ends, without sharing, and just take instead of give to our fellow man, we are indulging in the lowest form of the orange or social level of consciousness. This was one of the temptations of Christ in the desert, the temptation to use his spiritual power to become an earthly ruler. He chose instead a kingdom "not of this world", but earthly kings chose to perpetuate their power, building up palaces and armies by becoming parasites who live off the community. People worship them as symbols of power because they too would like to be kept, admired, rich and powerful. In the Middle Ages feudal barons lived off the energies of their people, taxing them and ruling them for their own selfish pleasures. Today, in democracies, we have no kings, but we still have more takers than givers, and we still have feudalism in our governmental structures which grievously tax the people from the "palaces" of worldly power.

The highest expression on the orange level would be to share ourselves and our wealth with others, to be able to relate to others and commune with others. Communication is sharing, from the root word muni, meaning "share". The highest expression of the orange level, or the level which makes us into a species which has to cooperate in order to survive, would be selfless service to humanity. Saints put humanity before themselves, but it is not necessary. It is high enough just to put humanity equal. That is difficult enough—to love humanity as much as you love yourself. To love it more than you love yourself might be a twisted trip, because there isn't anything other than yourself basically. There is a state of consciousness which can love more than self, in the sense that a mother will love her son or daughter and do for them things that she wouldn't do for herself, and there are certain people in the world who feel that they have everything or, having the feeling of being well-blessed, don't need anything for themselves, and so everything they do is really for others. You could say that that state of consciousness is the highest, where the only needs you have are the needs of others.

YELLOW

Yellow is the level in which the intellect begins to discriminate between others and itself and separates itself, by logical sequential thinking, from union with others or union with the Universe itself. The lowest level of yellow is where the intellect splits itself off and creates an ego, a self-sense, where it is always thinking of itself as a separate entity. To conquer that feeling, to challenge that self-sense and to deprogram it, or, in other words, to de-hypnotize its idea of itself, that it is a separate entity from the surrounding environment, is the challenge of the yellow level.

We begin by learning to understand how we know something, that is, to understand the field of the knower, how the knower validates its knowledge as a separate entity. Then we can begin to distinguish between human knowledge and Cosmic knowledge, because once the ego has become unified with the whole and it stops thinking as a separate entity and begins to think as a whole, then the intellect becomes a tool of the Universe rather than the tool of a separate, selfish individual. When the intellect is used in the service of the total Cosmos, then it becomes gold, golden yellow, instead of yellow. So from the lowest level of self-separation and egocentricity, the ego is blown up to the size of the Universe, as it were, and being such a large one it has to include all the other egos in it, which is quite difficult, because it is one thing to be a blown-up ego, but when you see another blown-up ego, it is intolerable. So the highest expression is to be the biggest ego that encloses the whole Universe in it and also includes a few other people. Of course, you can be a big ego and say, "Yes, I am one with the One" and all that stuff, but once somebody that you don't like walks through the door, you want to kick him out. As long as there is a differing ego in your Universe, however big your Universe is, you have a problem, because they can say something different, make the Universe a different way from what you are experiencing. So the highest function of the yellow level is to discover how you have that self-sense that includes all other self-sense as well and that dissolves the separation between yourself and others. Then your aura acquires a golden tinge around it, depicted by the clairvoyant artist as a nimbus around the head. It is not quite as they painted it, but it is a golden light around the head which can be seen in moments of high inspiration.

GREEN

Green in its lowest expression is the desire to possess things for our own security. Every living organism has a need for security and if it cannot get enough it has feelings of insecurity. Human beings fear lack, and this is not just a material feeling. America is an affluent country and most people really do not need to fear for lack of money or food, and yet there is a lot of fear of lack. The need for an overabundance of money can be like a squirrel storing up nuts for the winter; it is a compensation for something else. In other words, our desire to possess security—whether it be money, property, goods or anything else—and to hang on to it for ourself, is a compensation for our feelings of not trusting the Universe, feeling that we'll be left out or left behind or that somehow if we don't have money in the bank, the Cosmos is going to betray us. Can we really trust that Universal One to deliver? This is the challenge at the green level—how to get that Cosmic credit card which is really a joker's card, because once you get it, you never need to use it because you have everything already. The whole Universe is yours, so there is no separation. You don't have to steal or take away from others because if they've got it, it is just like your having it. Every businessman knows that all you need is resources to use, and then you can make a profit. Whether you actually own the resources or not is not important. And the same is true of everything in the world. We only think we need to own it.

The pride of ownership and the greedy desire to own something is a problem which is very real with human beings, particularly when it comes to possessing people. It is very difficult for most people to let go of their love objects. They want to own the body of the person they love and to possess their mind and their attention, to such a degree that they should not look anywhere else. One look in another direction is a sin to such a person, so insecure in themselves that they daren't even think the unthinkable thought that their love object might even look at another person. And if they see them looking, they feel, "Why are you looking over there? You look this way to me! I am your wife. I am your boyfriend." Their possessiveness is so great that they are going to scratch somebody or hit somebody in order to show proof of ownership. Most love songs are based on these feelings that you are mine and nobody else is going to get even a kiss, otherwise I'm miserable. We have this kind of possessiveness with our children, with our husbands and wives, with our property, with the gifts of our talents and even with our knowledge. There are many people who are so proud of their knowledge that they are like an encyclopedia, greedily stuffing it in, as if it somehow had enormous value, a bit like antiques stored away, gathering dust, getting more valuable with age. That sort of person is terribly insecure. Insecurity is a very human problem affecting all the levels and causing people to act rather strangely to each other, both in love and in financial transactions, and this conflict in the heart center over who possesses what and who controls what is a worldwide human problem that has to be mastered before we can have peace.

To triumph over insecurity you have to become totally free of the need to possess anything. Not that you shouldn't possess things. There is no reason why you shouldn't have lots of money or lots of everything, but you have to be able to kiss it goodbye tomorrow without any pain. If you do not own anything that you value that you couldn't leave tomorrow or walk away from, then misfortune has no power over you. You don't attach to anything, and that is the triumph over the possessive drive. Some people think that the highest expression of this level is to reject wealth or money or property, but renunciation is often just a form of spiritual pride. The real triumph over the drive to possess and to secure ourselves is to trust the Universe so much that you actually become one with it and then you live in the Universe as if God were well-pleased with you and will give you everything that is for your good.

BLUE

In the blue level, one lives a life based on assumptions which are held as concepts of reality. Whether your assumptions are those of religion or whether they are of science is immaterial. If a thought or a dogma or doctrine or a mind-set is convincingly presented, then the blue level will be attracted to it, simply because the drive on that level is to experience settled conditions. The scientist is hunting to settle his mind by examining one truth after another, to arrive at the best explanation of Nature or reality, and in religion, of course, we accept an explanation from on high or through inspiration or through individuals who seem to know what they are talking about. Since their words seem to have a ring of truth about them, we grab them and make them into a dogma, "That's my trip, that's my truth, and everything I hear and see is going to be compared with that." This is the lowest expression of the blue level simply because it is devoting our consciousness to an authority.

The highest expression of the blue level is when our devotion to something transcends thought, transcends concepts, transcends assumptions so that we don't assume anything anymore and therefore we are not presupposing anything. We are living a life based on "what is". In other words, we perceive what is, and the only way we can do that on the blue level is to see that Nature has behind it a purity that is far beyond any human thoughts. Human thoughts are only ideas and explanations, and concepts about Nature, and to devote ourselves to that kind of knowledge is a lower form of devotion, whereas if we can devote ourselves to life as it is unfolding in front of us, we go beyond conceptual knowledge and write our own mind experience in life, instead of in religion and science and all the other things you read about in books, which at best is second-hand knowledge; anything you don't get from the Source itself is second-hand, even if it is from Christ. If you are in direct touch with the Christ-mind, then it's first-hand, but the trouble with the world is that it takes everything second-hand; it reads it in a Bible, it makes the Bible holy because it is an authority, or it takes the truth in this way or that way, but it is all second-hand. Other people had to write it in English. So this is the danger—that we will take the husk, the translation, rather than the kernel of truth. The truth is always in front of us at every moment, unfolding in our own life experience, and if we can see through that and devote ourselves to that through Nature's unfolding life experience, then we won't need to conceptualize it. We can worship and devote our mind and soul and body to a thought of the One. That is, our thought life and our actual life become one; there is no separation between the life eternal which we believe in and how we live our own life.

The lowest form of conceptual experience is memory. Everything we stuff into our memory is lying there, as it were, as the basis of our experience, and if we can transcend that and go directly to how life is actually happening and unfolding around us and in us, then we are into a different kind of reality. We are still on the same level of consciousness, but it's a higher form. The selfish kind of religiosity, the "I have the truth" sort of thing, is a very dark blue in the aura, unlike the luminosity of the person who has transcended all that and is seeing into the heart of Nature, seeing it unfolding in life, looking at their own lives and looking at the lives of others, and reading the Book of Life. Then their aura becomes very electric blue and vibrating, transparent with an iridescence in it, like the color of electric welding, so bright that it is hard to look at. It is a bright blue, a bit like the blue on a peacock's neck or the blue in the spectrum when you see it on a white piece of paper, shining brilliantly. It is hard to describe. That luminosity comes into the aura first at the edges and gradually gets towards the center in a person who is totally devoted to life or life forces. If you really read Christ, his whole pointing to the Kingdom of God is pointing to potent Life Force. In every example he says, "The Kingdom of God is like this," and if you look at it, he is talking about how life is writing itself in consciousness. So the highest expression of blue is to understand this truth not conceptually but at the level of Life itself.

INDIGO

The lowest expression of indigo is to always be living in the future and never here and now. Your expectations and desires are never in life as it is, because you are always hoping it will be something else, wishing, living in a wishy-washy wishing world that is always expecting things to "happen". People who live this kind of life don't want to accept responsibility for the situation they are in. They want someone else to come into their dream world and finance it. I remember a man coming to our London community who only wanted to meditate and then write a book about it. He wanted the whole community to finance him and relieve him of all chores while he indulged in meditation. I told him that every member of the community including myself had that wish and we would all be glad to do the same as he, but we had to work to keep the center going. Needless to say he was not impressed with our community when it refused to grant his wish for a riskless future at our expense. Neither were we impressed by his holiness, which was obviously false. God is worth working for! Hard work or working with one's body and having to support oneself or keep the place clean is not always pleasant work, and there is an avoidance in such people, because their tendency is to run for the future to escape the present. If your energies are negative in this indigo level of consciousness, you are always trading the present off for something that is a little rosier over the next hill, chasing your hat down the street in the wind, and you can never catch up to reality. It's always going to be better in the future, so it doesn't have to be any good now. Once or twice you hit the jackpot and it encourages you to stay in the same habit patterns and not do anything about changing your life, because you think you may be able to live on other people's energy, rather than enjoying the certitude of not being dependent upon others. The problem with indigo people is that they are often Utopians, who are waiting for Utopia to come so they can go and live in it. So the hard work of building Utopia, chopping trees down, building log cabins, doing all the hard work of digging wells and roads and things that have to be done to make a community work, that's an unpleasant thought. They'd rather be off somewhere doing nice paintings and playing music and everything kind of up there in the clouds in some idyllic state that's going to happen without their having to make it happen.

Certainty can come once having mastered this, because there is an energy in it which can bring things about. If you could put your consciousness ahead into the future, then you could change the present. You can have control over your present life by projecting your energy in such a way that the Cosmos manifests the present. In other words, if you are able to anticipate and to have foresight and to walk, as it were two years ahead of yourself and be willing to put the energy into preparing now for what's going to happen in two years, then you will manifest the present world. That is the highest expression of indigo—to be able to be a prophet or someone who really gets out ahead of the human race and plops something down with enough energy so that humanity actually becomes the prophecy. In a sense, all government of the nation and everywhere else is directed from this highly imaginary point in the future because every idea that becomes law now or becomes manifest now in the social world has taken a long time to get there, it has had to be done ahead of time in order to happen now. In order to make a thing happen now in our lives, we have to invest some energy in the future, and this is indigo's highest expression. You could say that Christ is working on the present by having projected himself into the future two thousand years ago and is thereby conditioning our spiritual life and preparing us for the next step in evolution, where we can become more selfless and actually manifest his theory about the Kingdom of Heaven.

All the great beings have this intuitive indigo level of consciousness highly developed and are therefore able to transcend time by planting seed thoughts that are very dynamic and work in human consciousness, just as if you poke someone in the ego, they will walk around for months, churning, and they'll become more perfect as a result of it. Great beings like Christ, Buddha, and Lao Tzu are like a nuisance in the world because they face you with life as it could be lived and ought to be lived and churn you up until you have to begin to manifest this ideal state in order to be at peace with yourself. The real indigo is this quality of vision. To material-minded people, a "vision" is a dream, something that is not real. But the highest expression of indigo is to have a vision of the future so powerful that you are moved to make it as real to others as it is real for you. Just as our potential is real, even though not yet manifest, so too is the world's future real and able to be seen by those who have eyes to see. Intuition is the direct perception of eternal truth which transcends all time and thus can carry the future into the present and plant it there like a seed. The lowest level of indigo is to escape reality but in its highest expression, the indigo consciousness creates reality.

VIOLET

The violet level is the working of our imaginations. There is no philosopher or scientist or poet who has ever really been able to say what the imagination of man is. Only wise men try to research it, because it is a difficult thing to research, and who is doing the imagining about the imagination? The first hurdle of the violet level is to become aware that the habitual workings of your mind, which you lump together and call "me" or "my perceptions", are really made up of images and that these images have no substantial reality unless you believe in them and make them solid. The lowest expression of the violet level is to allow our imaginations to be used for fantasies or to allow the images in our mind to degrade us so that we are living a life of false images and lose touch with the truth in situations as they really are. The lowest form of our imagination is when we have all kinds of fears and doubts and twists in our minds which are like ghosts that are not real but which dominate our life, and this is true of individuals and groups and even nations. You could say that right now, Russia has certain ghosts in its mind about being encircled, and the actions of the Soviets in Vietnam are based upon their fearful imaginings. China is saying, "Look, we see you, we know you, we are like you too, so we know what you are doing." But the Russians have not laid the ghosts to rest, and they have continued to do certain actions, so now we have a war. What did China attack Vietnam for? Because China too has a ghost. A nation where one-fifth of everything that is machined in the land is a weapon, has a ghost in there. It is lurking and dominating the lives of 248 million people in Russia and that is a very important realization, that in the imagination lurks that image. Now, in individuals you have similar ghosts which usually are paranoiac. People are feeling they are being looked at, so they put on a face and say, "This is my image," but inside they are not that at all, and so there is a falsity in their imaginations. They have a disease, like cancer of the imagination, which keeps them from being whole. Therefore we all have, in our imaginations, the power to heal, to make whole.

Imagination has total power over your thought life. Every thought you have is an image of some kind. Everything you look at, whether it is a star, the sun, or a person, is an image. The primordial imagination of the entire Universe is an image; even the circling galaxies, they're all images. On that level of the imagination, everything in creation has form. There cannot be any content without form; the two work together. If you can go beyond form, you can go beyond content to the purity where there are no images at all. This is the triumph of someone (to use Christ again) who says, "I am nothing." What does he mean? He has reached that state of the imagination where he is seeing beyond the imagined condition of things to another domain of reality, where he is not looking at things from their forms or from their images but is penetrating to the formless pure consciousness, which creates those forms. Every individual person has this trip to go through, and there is no escape from the ultimate challenge of that seventh level to become master of our imaginations. It is probably the hardest trip and worse work than getting rid of your ego because, in a sense, the ego is an image too, just as everything else is. So to get into the highest manifestation of the imagination, you have to be very careful about the lower manifestations because they are subtle and can sneak up on you. They can even affect your body, without your realizing it. The egocentric imagination is very deceptive.

Imagination has total power over everything that happens in the body. Since whatever is in your imagination is very powerful, it has direct control over your cells. The messages which travel up and down your nerves are all dictated ultimately by your imagination because sitting on top of the highest level of government of all the lower level functions of the brain is the world of abstract images, which we don't know very much about. To see how powerfully suggestion works through the imagination, you need only look at the power of hypnosis. A stage hypnotist can gain enough power over a person to make an imaginary cigarette burn the skin through the sheer power of suggestion and then heal it up again by the same power. If people do auto-hypnosis, they gain that power over themselves. And in the same way, if we do not control our imaginations in ordinary daily life, then we have no power over ourselves and that tremendous power of consciousness is free to wander wherever it will and to sweep us along with it, because we do not understand how it works. Imagination is the power which dictates to our cells their idea of themselves. You could be twenty-one years old, but if your idea of yourself is an old man with no energy, you will get old and you'll look tired. If your inner thought of yourself is diseased and stressful and frustrated you'll get cancer, because the life forces will separate and some cells will take off and have their own government and be a law unto themselves, just as we have lawless rebels in society. When the image of what we are decays and degrades itself to the point of disorder where there is no law anymore and everyone is a law unto himself, then crime rises in the social body politic and we become diseased and we can't cure it. When the whole of society is sick, it is because its image is not clear. It is confused and full of mental ghosts. If an individual person has that same inner division, he will finish up with cancer, but he can be healed of cancer by reversing the process. The imagination has power over cancer, because cancer is not entirely a physical disease; it is a spiritual disease. It originates through the conflict that the imagination has with our will. The will is the heart, what we truly want in the heart. Do we want to be spiritual? We're not often sure whether we really want it, you know. Secretly, we might want to indulge in all the fleshy things of life, but we think we'd better be spiritual, because that's a kind of insurance and, although we secretly want all these sensory and earthly things, we'd better go the spiritual trip as well; so we half surrender to God and then there is a war inside, a secret war that is going on in our imagination between what our heart wants (our will) and our imagination, and it is this war that causes cancer. You can sometimes get a cancerous person to say to himself, "Hey look, you have got to get your will and your imagination going in the same direction," but most of the ones I know have said, "No, you can't help me; this spiritual healing isn't really for me. I'll go have some drugs or something, get it maybe that way from my doctor." And of course, there's no cure for that disbelief in life energy. There are a lot of people recovering from cancer right now who are undergoing a program with refashioning their imaginations, because if you can accept that you can change yourself, there's help. If you know you are the cause, then you know why you are sick, and then there's some hope for a cure. If you are a lunatic and you're in a lunatic asylum and you say you're not sick and it is the doctors who are sick for putting you in there, is there any hope that you'll ever get out? No. But if the lunatic can say, "Yes, I am in here because there is something screwed up inside my head. I know I'm sick and that's why I am here," he is already on the way to mental health, because he can do something about what he knows is wrong in his imagination.

The Cosmos, in its wisdom, knows our minds before we even know them ourselves, so that is why we have a situation, a program happening to us, an evolutionary program working through us. All these choices that we have to make are designed for us to perfect ourselves and, through the choices we have made in the past, we have had a hand in making those situations in which we now find ourselves. We have built our own nest and now we have to live in it. Cosmically speaking, every problem originates in the person who has the problem. There are no problems except people.

All the levels work together for good in the end, even when they are in conflict with each other. This is a paradox but if we see that we are creating one situation after another which causes problems, we can find an answer by looking for the level of consciousness missing from our life, which is causing us to lack something. Without some way of isolating that cause from the general mass of consciousness which is us, we have no way of beaming in on an effective solution. All situations at every level of life can be turned to good through skillful action, and all pain can become the cause of change and good. Pain is only destructive if we are insensitive and ignore its first warnings. All disharmony in our lives gives pain if we do not correct its power to disturb us. The Cosmos always gives us fair warnings. All human suffering and disease is the inability to heed those warnings and thereby implement change.

This is the problem in all spiritual life and society too, that religious people are generally full of spiritual pride and they do not know that they are sick. They're spiritually sick, because they do not understand that spiritual pride is the greatest enemy of the spirit. So thinking that they've got the right answers and thinking they have the hold on the only truth, and then laying it on everybody else before they've even put it into practice, they preach and they say, "You've got to change, and the Bible says this," and they know it all; but you look at their lives and they're in a mess. There is no radiance in their faces, there is no happiness in them, and they are talking about the Kingdom of Heaven like a salesman. That is a spiritual disease, to have pride and conceit in your own knowledge, and it is going to trip you, you are not going to be happy, because people who are truly in tune with the Universe don't have that pride; they have humility, they are close to the soil, they are the humus. They love Nature and they are in tune with the humble things of life, the simple things of life. They can do humble things and listen to others, hear their reality, and not think they know it all. It is then—in that state of awareness, in that highest state of the imagination—that they have an image of themselves as being nothing. And because they are nothing, they are not programming their minds with all sorts of fantastic thoughts but just allowing the Cosmos to impress itself on them, just like they were a new photographic plate, totally receptive and responsive to light. In that state their imaginations become in tune with not only their own will but the will of God or the will of the Cosmos, so there is no conflict in them. When the will and the imagination are both going in the same direction, when your will is the same as the Cosmic will, what conflict can there be? That happiness and grace is the highest expression of the seventh level.

THE AURA PENDULUM

Having questioned ourselves and matched ourselves and maybe our friends and family against the descriptions of the seven levels, we can now explore a tool by which we can check our conclusions. We call the tool an AURA PENDULUM, a small divining device that amplifies for us the signals that we receive as we try to relate to ourselves and to the world and people around us. The Aura Pendulum, like all other divining tools, develops the indigo or intuitive level of consciousness.

WHAT IS AN AURA?

Your aura is the light which encloses your body in a rainbow of colors. It will be either dark or bright depending on the radiance of your consciousness. The vibrating atoms, molecules, cells and organ systems of your body all contribute to the auric vibration which you radiate and which is uniquely yours. You also transmit your moods, feelings, thoughts, attitudes, and values in this radiation. Certain clairvoyants have the ability to "read" the colorings of your aura and help you to know yourself better. But you do not need their help. You can divine or dowsse the contents of your own and others' consciousness with a supersensitive antenna that has been built by Nature into your own body and into the bodies of birds, animals and insects, too. However, while other creatures make full use of this antenna, we humans are mostly unaware of this beautiful instrument within us and we are not always in touch with its responses. So, to become more aware and more sensitive, we need to amplify its signals. Designed and used for this purpose are various tools, some of which date back in their origins to ancient times. These are the pendulums and divining rods that you see in ancient Egyptian paintings and which have their counterpart in the modern tools for supersensing, such as the Aura Pendulum. Everyone can use this little tool since it is only an extension of another instrument that is inside us all.

THE SUPERSENSE

Most of the time we are so caught up in the stimulations of our five physical senses that we are unaware that the key to a sixth sense, the supersense, is at our fingertips. This key is our supersensitive nervous system—the Biblical "Tree of Knowledge"—which is the most sensitive instrument known.

Your nervous system is a fantastic thirty-seven mile long antenna for sensing the subtle vibrations of people and the world you live in. If you walk into a room full of angry people, the hair on your arms may stand up. If you enter a church, the devotional vibrations there will calm you and give you peace. If you meet someone new and experience instant dislike, it may be because the vibration of their personality is not in harmony or resonance with your vibration, or it may be that you are picking up a message that here is someone you cannot trust. By using a pendulum you can learn to tune in directly to someone's actual mental or emotional state and their unconscious motives as well. You can check out those vague "hunches" that we all experience and find out the truth of the situation. Thus your power of perception is amplified and your relationships become more meaningful. You are able to test whether a new-found friend is good for you or not and your real friends will appreciate you more. They will love you for your ability to see into and share more fully their inner worlds.

FEEDBACK

Feedback is the principle in Nature that facilitates communication and leads to harmony, growth and oneness among Her creatures. Biofeedback works by helping to make you aware of the internal operations of your body. The biofeedback instrument converts a nervous signal, such as a heartbeat or a brainwave, into an audible or visible signal. Once you become aware of that feedback message, you can learn to consciously control and regulate what was automatic before. Your heart, for example, normally beats automatically below the threshold of your conscious awareness. By consciously focusing your attention on your heartbeat, however, you can learn to interpret and control it. The same is true of your unconscious mind which is connected with a whole universe of invisible energy fields and beams of light around and inside you. Your unconscious mind has a knowledge of the universe that is as vast as the universe itself and to divine or dowse you have to be willing to dive into your unconscious. By using the pendulum and other new tools of Supersensonic feedback, you can learn to tune in to the depths of your own and others' emotions, subconscious motivations, thoughts and dreams. You can even contact that Universal Intelligence which holds the answer to every question and in whom all things are possible.

HOW DOES A PENDULUM WORK?

When your aura interacts with the field of an object, a person or an energy of some sort, a subtle signal passes through your nervous system. This signal of subtle perception travels to the nerve ends in your fingertips in the form of an involuntary nervous reflex—a very slight "twitch" in the muscles. When your fingers are holding a pendulum this signal is amplified by the motion of the pendulum and you actually see your own responses.

In this way an invisible, normally unconscious signal is converted into a visible pendulum response. This movement is usually a rotation to the right (clockwise) or to the left (counterclockwise) in response to positive/negative energy or yes/no answers to questions. Clockwise rotation is "Yes" for most people. You can find out if you are one of the few for whom clockwise means "No" by asking your unconscious a question whose answer you already know, like "Is my grandmother dead?" If you know she is and the pendulum swings counterclockwise then that's your signal for "Yes". With a pendulum, then, you can learn to communicate with your own or another's unconscious mind. When you probe the unconscious with your conscious mind you embark upon the most interesting and ultimately revealing journey of your life! That is why we call the pendulum a tool of spiritual perception. It helps to bring you in tune with your real Self, beyond the illusory impressions of the five senses and the self-deceptive workings of the mind.

ABOUT DOUBT

You may feel a bit funny at first, wagging a pendulum. But remember, if you are self-conscious or at all doubtful, you definitely will not be able to do divining, no matter how hard you try. Your pendulum may move, but the answer may not be true. The secret is not to "do" anything, but to relax after asking a question and let the answer happen through you. To open the supersense* you will have to go beyond the blue level attachment to concepts of self, at least temporarily. You will have to get into the big Self—the Self that knows, because it is everything that is.

Even someone else's doubt can interfere, if you let it. You must learn to still the conscious mind so completely that it is temporarily at rest and receptive to the subtle signals coming from the unconscious. When you learn to "tune in" you can begin to see that there is certainty in the universe and that you can find it inside. The intuitive supersense is the key to directly perceiving that certainty. But you cannot expect infallible results, even accurate ones, at the beginning. A baby must first crawl, then fall down a few times before it can get up and even walk, let alone run. Training the supersense is just like any other discipline. To be good at it you have to practice, practice, practice.

* Practicing with the supersense has been developed into a new science called Supersensomics, meaning the sensing of subtle vibrations. It can be used for contacting the cosmic intelligence inherent in every object and can therefore be used to overcome uncertainty and doubt.

TUNING A PENDULUM

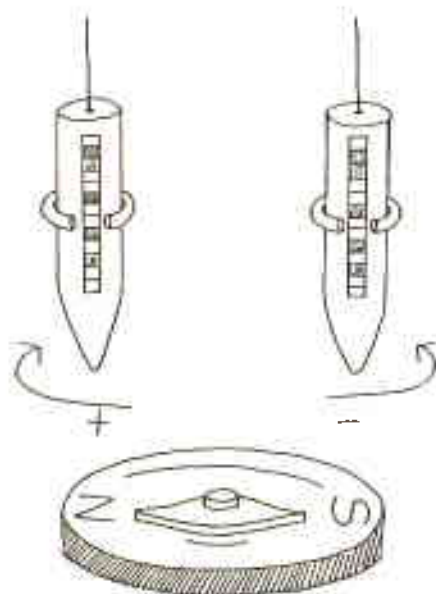

To receive a radio station with maximum clarity, we have to "tune" the receiver to the exact frequency of that station. In a similar way, we must tune the pendulum to our personal "frequency" in order to receive the incoming nervous signals "loud and clear". To do this you will need a simple pocket compass or a bar magnet, since each emits both a positive and a negative field that is easy to detect with a pendulum.

Step One: Relax your hand and arm muscles and relax your mind, letting go of care and worries and bringing your full attention to the task at hand. Concentrate on your breath. Breathe deeply and slowly from the diaphragm. This will help to still your mind and focus your consciousness. Hold the string with the thumb and forefinger near the top of the pendulum with the pendulum dangling one or two inches above the end of the compass needle pointing north. The choice of which hand to use is entirely up to you. You may wish to try both, to see which is more sensitive.

Step Two: Make the pendulum swing back and forth from east to west in a line two to four inches wide. This overcomes the resistance of inertia, thus making it easier for the pendulum to break into a spin.

Step Three: Slowly "walk" the string downward by gradually sliding the thumb and forefinger up and down against each other, still keeping the pendulum swinging. Continue to breathe deeply and slowly.

Step Four: You will reach a point where the pendulum comes "alive" and starts to rotate in a circular motion. This is your tuning length. It is usually located somewhere between one and three inches from the top of the pendulum. (If your pendulum does not begin to spin even after you have let the string all the way out, go back to Step One and Polarization of any object can be determined by tuning the pendulum to its energy field in reference to the magnetic compass. The Aura pendulum will rotate to the right or to the left over the north or south end of a magnet and the positive or negative end of an object.

begin again. Make sure you relax your muscles; any tension inhibits the pendulum response.)

Step Five: You can double-check your tuning by stopping the rotation and swinging the pendulum back and forth over the other end of the compass needle. If you are properly tuned, the pendulum will begin to spin in the opposite direction.

Step Six: Tie a knot in your string at this point, if you wish, so you can go directly to your tuning point whenever you use the pendulum. This tuning length will be different for different pendulums, because of their weight and energy. The tuning length is not always permanent and may change, so you need to practice these steps once in a while to double-check.

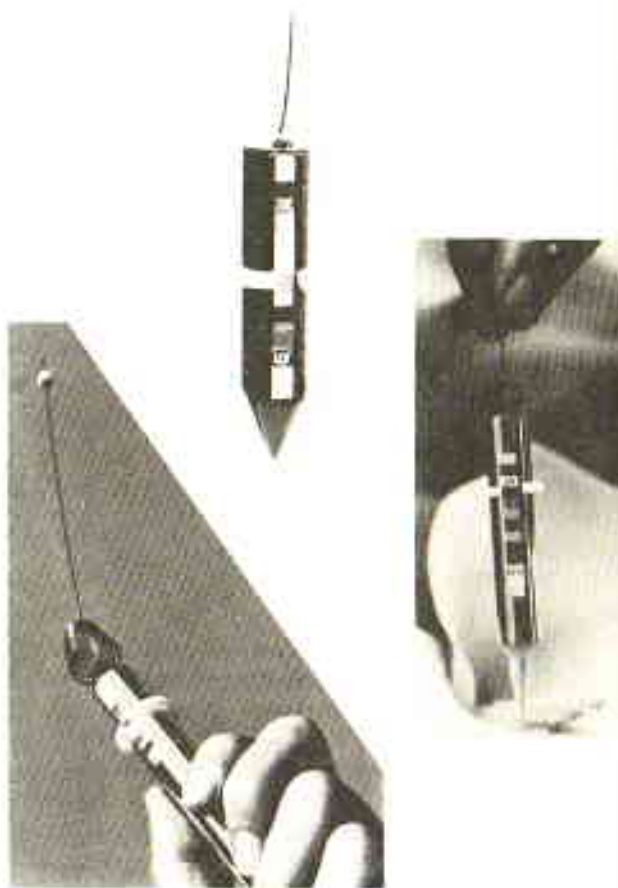

Helpful Hints: If you don't have a compass readily available, you can repeat the above procedure while holding the pendulum one or two inches above your open palm where there is a subtle vortex of energy that you can detect with a pendulum. To double-check, return the pendulum to the back and forth motion and turn your hand over. The pendulum should spin in the opposite direction. To assist you in finding your tuned length it is helpful to know that the normal tuned length for the Aura Pendulum is about two and one-half inches, two inches for the Hills' Positive Green and one and one-quarter inches for the Spectrum Mirror.

TUNING TO COLOR

Since every material has its own vibration, the material a pendulum is made of can produce a strong enough radiation to interfere with your personal vibration. For this reason the Aura Pendulum is made of wood and the Spectrum Mirror and Aura Sensor are made from special plastics which amplify the divining effect.* The Aura Pendulum is painted black because black absorbs light. The Spectrum Mirror and Aura Sensor have mirror surfaces that reflect away interfering vibrations such as the negative and doubtful thoughts of others. All three are equipped with a spectrum strip. By sliding the white cursor to the appropriate color on the spectrum you tune both the pendulum and yourself to the corresponding level of consciousness. Each color resonates or vibrates in harmony with one of the seven energy centers of the human aura.

* For more information on the Spectrum Mirror Pendulum and the Aura Sensor, see page 125.

THE ENERGY CENTERS

As we have seen throughout this book, we are using a deeper level of our aura where there is a dynamic system of interconnected energy centers called chakras. These energy centers are keys to understanding the seven levels or spheres of consciousness and our power to divine depends on what is happening on each level. Whether you know it consciously or not, these centers are spinning away inside you right now, just as your heart is ticking away. Each center or chakra (wheel) is connected with the nervous system through a corresponding nerve plexus of the spinal column or a corresponding part of the brain. Your health and even your life rests upon the balance of these dynamic centers of activity, just as much as it rests and depends on the balanced beat of your heart. The seven centers are also closely associated with the activity of the major glands in the endocrine hormonal system which also regulates all body activity. The endocrine glands have been directly linked to changes in personality characteristics; by changing a single component of our endocrine secretions we change our personality. Proper functioning of the endocrine system and hence of the personality, depends on the balanced absorption and re-radiation of light by these seven energy centers.

THE RAINBOW HARMONIC

We have seen that each color of the spectrum is related to a level or type of the human personality. It is also true to say that each of the rainbow colors resonates or vibrates in harmony with one of the seven tones of the octave and with one of the chakras or centers in the human endocrine system, so that by discovering which of these centers is active or inactive we find our degree of resonance or dissonance with life around us.

By setting the cursor of the pendulum at the color harmonic of a particular energy center you tune your consciousness to receive the radiations of that center. By then holding the pendulum two to eight inches above a particular chakra you can detect whether the energy flow is positive or negative by the direction of the spin. Further details on this will be found in the next section, on Aura Balancing.

CHOOSING THE BEST ENVIRONMENT

Not only do things have vibrations but also thoughts, shapes, colors, feelings, and places. To get the best results, avoid using any pendulum in rooms where the vibrations of metal or of electrical equipment can interfere with results. As closed cavities inhibit response, open all closed drawers in the room. Do not practice in a room with bright colors unless your mind is trained enough to counteract their radiations. Use a table with a neutral cloth, either black or white or a green that is neither too blue nor too yellow. Better still go out into the sunlight which is a natural amplifier for these signals.

YOUR THOUGHTS CAN INTERFERE

Both doubts and wishful thinking can interfere with results as do unconscious motives. All of these break the three ancient laws of divining: 1) it must not be done for gain (although if money comes as a by-product, that is fine); 2) it must not be done for demonstration or to prove anything to doubters; 3) it must not be used for reading the future. These laws are realities because your proficiency in this science is in direct proportion to the purity of your own consciousness; ulterior motives will inevitably ruin the accuracy of your results.

DOUBLE-CHECK

Do not use any pendulum as the sole source of information. The pendulum should be used to get leads which may save you a great deal of time, but you should always try to check them out by other methods as well. Infallibility rarely occurs, even in modern science, and you cannot expect infallible results from an instrument which is an extension of your own evolving consciousness.

GENERAL USES OF THE PENDULUM

You can use the Aura and Spectrum Mirror pendulums for general purposes unrelated to color, by setting the cursor on the neutral color Green. Green is midway between the red and violet ends of the spectrum at the balance point; hence it acts as a neutral color in all Supersensonics work. You can use it to tune into and ask questions about your loved ones, to bridge the generation gap, to improve communications and to develop your sensitivity to others. If you have written a letter to someone and you are not sure whether to send it, ask your unconscious with the pendulum whether you should send it or not. You will probably find that "deep down" you knew all along what to do but you were not sufficiently in touch with your own reality to be sure, until the pendulum amplified those deeper feelings for you.

WORK WITH A FRIEND

You can test your supersensing abilities and your intuitive feelings by working with another experimenter. Each of you can try to tune in to the other's thoughts and use the pendulum to check your accuracy. Then when you have a "Yes" or "No" answer you can double-check with your friend. Do not be discouraged by failure. It is often through failure that we learn what not to do. Divining is a skill like anything else and we must practice like we practice the piano, or tennis, or any other skill. To stop after the first failures is negative and unrealistic.

OTHER USES

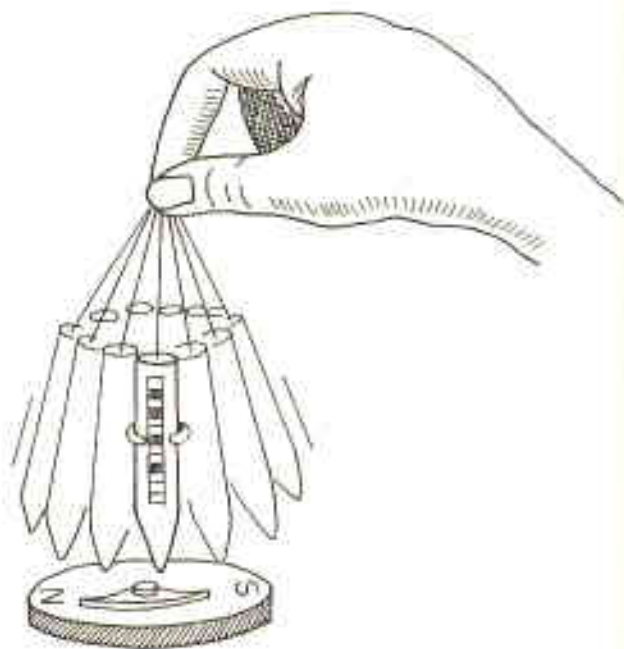

Choice of the right foods for us is vital to our health and happiness and often we know instinctively that something we are eating is not good for us. By using the pendulum before we eat or, better still, before we buy our food, we can confirm or check our hunches. The same applies to choosing our friends. Sometimes we associate with people who do not make us feel happy or fulfilled but we cannot decide whether they are right for our growth or not. Here again the pendulum can help to settle our indecision. Whenever you have to choose between two alternatives, let the pendulum help you. Or let it help you to find lost objects, lost people or pets. Just ask a series of questions that need a "Yes" or "No" answer until you have filled in the picture of where the lost person, animal or thing may be. Every day a whole series of questions arises in our mind and we usually answer them with our logical or reasoning faculty, sometimes blundering into unforeseen difficulties as a result. By using the Aura or Spectrum pendulum set on the neutral color Green, we can get an answer from a deeper part of ourselves that functions beyond the limits of the Ego and the logical and analytical processes of the conscious mind.

THE PENDULUM AS AN EVOLUTIONARY TOOL

With regular practice we not only become more confident in our use of the pendulum, but we begin to recognize that, as an amplifier, it is a valuable key to what is really going on inside us. After a while we become more sensitive to our own intuitive signals and we sometimes catch them even before the pendulum starts to change its swing. When that happens we know that we are beginning to get in touch with our greater Self that knows the Truth in every situation and our thoughts before we think them. The signals from that One within us all can guide us through to total self-awareness and ultimately to the discovery of our Rainbow Body.

—Phil Allen

AURA BALANCING

Aura balancing is a wonderful technique for self-discovery. Imagine that the innocent looking tool, the pendulum, added to your own biological sensitivity, can take you into domains of yourself you never knew existed! The pendulum plus our nervous system take us into the world of vibrations of thoughts, emotions and hormone secretions which are what create the colors and qualities of the aura.

As the pendulum immediately registers positivity or negativity in an organism, its health or disease, it becomes an effective biofeedback instrument for going beyond the apparent to what's really going on at deeper nonphysical levels. When you're claiming you are positive and the pendulum keeps spinning negatively, you have to face yourself on a deeper level and come to terms with the basic patterns of your consciousness. States of dis-ease and unhealthiness on all levels of consciousness can be worked on with the pendulum, which responds from our unconscious tensions rather than our conscious knowledge.

Besides being a wily indicator of the negative thought tracks that will pull you down into gravity, the pendulum also indicates those thoughts and patterns that will propel you into levity, radiation and en-lighten-ment. Selfish, egocentric interests comprise a burden that weighs us down. Centrifugal thoughts of an expanded self lift us up and make us feel light. So aura balancing shows us how to make light work for us and how to make our work on ourselves light. We can use the pendulum to put ourselves in touch with the source of life and light within ourselves—our higher Self.

Once my boyfriend wanted to balance my aura because he detected a certain rigidity in me and he felt that my heart was closed off. "No, no," I insisted, "I feel great, there's nothing negative going on in me." Surprisingly, when he did an aura balancing for me, he found several of my chakras were spinning negatively and when I looked into the causes, I found there were niggling, unresolved things weighing on the back of my mind that were preventing me from operating with my total wholehearted being. Thoughts like, "Last night my boyfriend sure seemed to be enjoying my best girlfriend. I wonder where all that's going to lead?!" Through the aura balancing I had to get in touch with how my jealousy and possessiveness were repelling him away. Once I saw and experienced the full extent of my "vibe", I also got in touch with the knowledge that when I am in the center of abundant love within myself, there is no one he'd rather be with.

HOW TO DO AN AURA BALANCING

The pendulum is your tool for discovering where negativity may reside in the chakras or psychic energy centers. Therefore to do an aura balancing you will need a spectrum pendulum because the colors on it respond selectively to the colors of the aura. A Spectrum Mirror, Wooden Spectrum Pendulum, or Aura Pendulum are specifically designed for this work, as is the Hills' Aura Sensor. (All are available from the publishers.) Specially tune the device to the colors of the aura (like tuning to the frequencies of a radio set) by moving the cursor to the corresponding spectrum color on the pendulum. Bring a glass of water to your side, its need will be explained later. If you're using a pendulum, tune it to your resonant string length according to the instructions provided on page 99.

STEP 1: TAKING A READING

Begin the aura balancing by having the subject comfortably stretch out horizontally on his or her back, with a pillow under the head. With your pendulum you will want to find out on what levels of consciousness there may be pain, problems, anger, frustration, fear, insecurities, dis-ease. So, first set the cursor on red and hold the pendulum over the red chakra at the base of the spine (genital area) and gently give the pendulum a swing forwards so that it oscillates back and forth. This is to overcome the inertia of the weight of the pendulum. If the pendulum begins to rotate clockwise, then the chakra is positive—all is well in the red, indicating good physical health, and you can go on to the next chakra. If the pendulum rotates counterclockwise, this indicates negativity present and you'll want to go into the problem with the subject in order to clear it* (directions provided below).

* Sometimes the pendulum swings are not all positive or all

STEP 2: DETECTING CHAKRA ENERGIES

Now move the cursor to orange and hold the pendulum over the spleen area and note the energy imbalances as indicated by the pendulum swings. Repeat this process for all seven energy centers. After you've taken a reading on all seven, ask your pendulum which chakra is the most negative, or which one is the "ball of wax" that may be causing all the other chakras to spin negatively. Choose this one to work on first.

STEP 3: EXTRACTING NEGATIVE ENERGY

While the pendulum rotates counterclockwise it is extracting negative energy from the subject. So that the energy isn't channelled into your being on a psychic level, put the fingers of your left hand (or the hand opposite to the hand you hold your pendulum with) into the glass of water you collected earlier and imagine that the negative energy is being unwound from the subject's body with the pendulum and is traveling up your arm, across your chest and down into the water in the glass. You do this while you probe the person, as explained in the next step.

Later, you will ask the subject to throw their negative water down the sink drain with their blessings and the suggestion that this psychic "excreta" be composted on the cosmic tides. We use water in this way to discharge negativity into, because water is a substance that can be impregnated with consciousness, just as your body, which is ninety percent water, is impregnated with your consciousness—your personal identity and soul.

Take your fingers out of the water whenever the pendulum begins to rotate positively (clockwise).

negative, for example, if the pendulum repeats a pattern of swinging counterclockwise twice and then oscillating. This is called a serial of two and has a specific meaning. For more details see Your Electro-Vibratory Body by Dr. Victor Beasley, University of the Trees Press.

STEP 4: BALANCING THE AURA

A "balanced aura" means that each of the seven chakras is clear and radiating positively. Your service in this step, (and this is the most important part of aura balancing) is to inquire of the person what is going on in their consciousness to cause the chakra to spin negatively. Keep extracting the negative energy into the water and while doing so—gently, sensitively, with caring for the person's being—you probe them to help them penetrate the source and root of their difficulty. Great empathy and loving acceptance is required of you throughout this process*. It might be very painful for the person to reveal their psyche and unfold their problem.

However, it is absolutely essential for them to do so if healing and conflict resolution is to take place. You want to help them get to that place "on the other shore" so to speak, where they have: 1) seen through the cause of the conflict and their part in creating the entanglement of their consciousness, and 2) recognized positive changes they can make within themselves and within their environment to meet and master the challenge.

Directing Inquiry: Two Approaches

You can use your knowledge of the color levels to tune into people directly and ask them the questions you intuit will help them get in touch with their problem, or you can turn to the Chart on page 68 to dows over the keywords on the level you're working on with your pendulum. When you get a strong "Yes" swing over one of the words, you then ask the person, "Does the word _____ have any special significance for you?" Usually the word has A LOT of significance to the person and they will open up with a lot of feeling about the word.

* See Exploring Inner Space for Creative Communication skills which are helpful for aura balancing.

If you are uncertain as to how to direct your probing you can always ask your pendulum which way to go. Be silent within yourself and focus in on the heart of the person, what they are really expressing from their hearts beneath all the words.

One way of knowing whether you're on the right track or not is to watch the pendulum's movement. Relative motions of power or weakness indicate whether you are "hot" or "cold" in zeroing in on the actual problem. When the pendulum suddenly picks up speed, ask the subject, "What are you thinking right now?", because the energy of their thought waves is being transferred to the pendulum's movement. It could be a positive thought or a negative one that causes this.

Once the pendulum reverses direction from negative to positive and registers a steady swing you can know that the person's "problem" is no longer a problem to weigh on their consciousness, sapping their energy, but a situation they see they can take steps to master. Once seen for what it is, the problem is not so big after all but becomes a situation one can change.

Once this chakra is totally cleared you can then take a quick reading on the other chakras that had been spinning negatively upon your first reading to see if they have cleared up as well. If negative ones still remain, dowse which one you should put your energy into first and repeat Steps 3 and 4.

STEP 5: REPLENISHING POSITIVE ENERGY

When all the chakras have been cleared, take a Hills' Positive Green Pendulum (specially tuned to prana or life force), or set the cursor of the Spectrum Mirror or Sensor on green and swing it in a positive direction all over the body, starting from the toes and working up to the head. This is to charge the person with vital force. Alternatively, as an extra charge, each chakra can be done in turn by tuning to the color for each chakra with the cursor, rotating the pendulum positively over the appropriate center and waiting for it to stop rotating, indicating the correct balance of positive energy has been achieved.

Then, before you, you will see a different person: face radiant, body relaxed, eyes moist and soft, a little smile projecting from the inside out. If you have done your work without pride intruding, you too will be in a similar space. Your heart will be open wide along with the other person's because that's just what happens when people share their real beings. Ask your subject to throw their own negative water away.

SOME OPTIONAL THINGS YOU CAN DO

You can tape record the session. Negative thought patterns are like weeds—they grow like crazy and bear many seeds. If we've been in a negative rut for some time, it's easy to slip back, and sometimes we ourselves forget our own positive solutions that we came up with when we were in that deep space during an aura balancing. Therefore a tape is insurance against forgetting the messages from our deeper self.

Likewise a way to instill the new thought/habit pattern into a person's mind is to take an essence point from one of the chakras balanced and have the person repeat that point a number of times to themselves as you swing the pendulum, (with cursor set to the color of that chakra) in a positive direction over that chakra. This will put energy and confidence behind the new movement of change.

In the pages to follow I'll share with you some of my experience that may help you.

DIFFICULTY GETTING IN TOUCH

When you are probing you will find that oftentimes a person is not aware of what is causing their chakras to rotate negatively. How can you as an aura balancer help them to get in touch? An understanding of these possible blocks to openness may help you.

1) Buried feelings: A common way people deal with their problems is NOT to deal with them, because they don't know how to resolve the difficult situation. "That's life," or "I'll be strong, I'll get over it," we say and bury all the pain and trauma under the carpet. For a long time Ann had a hard time getting in touch. Why? When she was a child her family used to laugh at her when she cried because she looked funny, so Ann stopped crying and started burying all the hurts away . . . unresolved.

2) Assumptions about life: We may be holding on to a point of view about life that is no longer valid, a childhood impression that we molded our life around. Rod's aura balancing centered around the heart chakra. The pendulum went negative for a long time, and periodically he would go into meditation and breathe deeply to get deeper in touch. Finally the pendulum reversed directions. Rod had gone back in memory to when he was seven years old and his father was telling him, "If they threaten you with a fight, just call their bluff!" Rod had responded that time by calling an adversary's bluff. Now he realized with his conscious mind that he was still "calling people's bluff" by maintaining a "superior" image and that he was not really in his heart.

A way to get to buried feelings and influential memories is to tell the person, in a calm voice, to relax and breathe deeply, letting go of tensions and going deeper into their feelings. Have them tune in to the chakra, or if there's a stiff, sore, gripping or pressured spot in the body in the vicinity of the chakra, have them focus on that and go into the pain. In Rod's case, there were two bands, ¼ inch wide on the outside of each breast running down his side where there was some pain. He got to this memory of his father by tuning in to those bands in meditation. After his insight he realized his chest tightened in those bands each time he acted against his true self by playing the superior one. His motive was to win love, but this approach had the effect of separating him from others. What truly linked him in love with others was just to give of his ordinary self.

Another block to being open is that one may be only too much aware of what the problem is; expressing it can be embarrassing or threatening. Thus, another reason for "not being in touch" is

3) Insecurity about being open: Once I lied to my boyfriend, who was balancing my aura, that I was not conscious of what was causing my negativity. He worked at extracting negative energy with the pendulum anyway and left it at that. The next day I had to be honest with him but it was extremely painful because he was the problem for me and my security was very threatened at the thought of coming out with what was troubling. I thought I would lose him if I expressed my real problem. I realized, however, that these little lies we hide from each other in the name of peace and true love are the little aggravations that lead to "irreconcilable differences" later on. I risked! I shared, and we both came to understand each other a lot deeper. Our love increased by the amount we were able to be open and truthful with each other.

Aura balancing requires a great deal of openness and trust. It leads to sharings and unveilings of our rich inner beings. Even if a person shocks you with what they say, realize that negativity is not the natural state of the Real being and that all problems are karmic situations designed to challenge us to find our hearts. Most people, if they could help it, would not have the problems they have, so even if the balancee is expressing doubts and resentments towards you, (this happens commonly enough in love relationships whether openly expressed or not.)

realize that it is probably very difficult for that person to share, and you might have to suffer being a target for awhile in order to get to the source of the problem, whether it is in you or your friend. Once out in the open and worked through, it will be a source of your greater trust and love. God is prodding us all to find out what real love is—and what it isn't.

ATTITUDES FOR THE AURA BALANCER

a) Have faith that the truth will be known. The higher self has all the solutions and all the energy you need to transcend any problem if you can but tap into its abundance. The pendulum will show you the way! Even if the person before you seems very sick, or you're really sick, or they've just revealed a can of worms involving you, don't worry! Fate is for your pruning that you may blossom forth a rarefied being. You don't have to get emotional or think yourself any worse or better for being blind or clever in a certain area. Take life as your teacher and figure out what the Cosmos is trying to tell you. Your greater attunement to Nature will yield your greater fulfillment. The true student of life is responsive and has the humility to learn from all situations.

b) Be a skilled listener and stick with the positive. Everyone has Truth within them. It is the skillful one who can recognize it and draw it out! The person whose aura you are balancing will unconsciously or semi-consciously express clues to solutions of their own problem. You pick up on these clues and feed back to the person these positive ideas until they hear them loud and clear for themselves. If they are going on and on in a negative, unproductive way about their situation, ask them, "What do you think you can do about that?"

c) Be patient. Thorough aura balancings may take a long time, especially if you concentrate on allowing the subject to explore their own problems and discover their own solutions, rather than just telling them outright what's what and giving them advice about what they should be doing. (The former way is by far the most meaningful in the long run.) It might be easy for you just to tell them what their problem is and to give advice but this robs a person of their experience of contacting their own inner voice and finding real solutions right within themselves. Perhaps trade off with a buddy to give each other aura balancings. That way you won't mind the time it may require—because you'll be requiring the same some-time soon too.

d) Be sensitive to the inner world of the person you are working on. It is likely that they feel very badly about their problem and wouldn't have it by choice and probably wouldn't like to tell a soul that they have it. Create an environment of trust and openness so that the person can feel okay about coming out with what's really going on inside. Above all, tune in with your heart and intuition and encourage the person to express what's troubling them that they may be healed. This requires purity in your own motives such that you give your aura balancing with a sincere wish to help another. If your wish is to become a great aura balancer/healer, your sensitivity to the other's true being will not be there.

You may find that doing aura balancing and having your aura balanced or balancing your own aura will put you in touch with your deepest heart and escalate your capacity to love tremendously. There are more advanced things you can do in aura balancings. Once you have mastered the steps given in this book and you feel yourself at a plateau of learning, you can contact me through the publishers to find out what you can do to take it all to an even deeper, more refined place.

Send $3.00 for paper on advanced aura balancing.

—Pamela Osborn

WHAT IS UNIVERSITY OF THE TREES?

If you are asking this question please write to us or better still, visit us among the giant redwoods if you are ever in this beautiful part of California. We are next to the 12,000 acres of our oldest state park and its 2,000 year-old trees, and our air is very sweet and fresh. We do not have overnight facilities on campus but there are several campsites nearby and five good motels. During the day we all work for our own "common ownership" publishing business and if you would like to work alongside us we would welcome your help. Or you can come at "tea-time" (4:00–5:00 p.m.) on a Tuesday or Saturday when the work day is over and there will be people to talk to you about our life here as a community working toward that group consciousness, in which all our spectrum levels resonate in a rainbow of harmony.

You could join us on a Friday night when we meditate and chant together and ask Christopher the deep questions about life that most concern us. We will also tell you more about our classes in Creative Conflict that help people to communicate better and get in touch with their hearts and deeper feelings. We act as mirrors to each other and through loving confrontation we open our hearts instead of clinging to the logic of the head. We are authorized by the State of California to grant degrees (Bachelor's, Master's and Doctor's). Our courses relate to our pioneer research into human awareness, and we hope soon to start a school for children based on the concepts of the nuclear family in the community, the seven levels of awareness and new methods of learning.

There is so much more to tell you about this exploratory, expanding group of people and our system of self-government which we call spiritual politics. We have a chanting choir that studies sound as a means of nonverbal communication and healing. There is R.I.S.H.E., which is a research institute for investigating the Supersensonic healing energies and the subtle life force that can be detected by Supersensonic methods and tools.

We are excited about the potency of what is happening here—every day brings new discoveries, new dynamic insights. If you would like to share them, please make contact. We cannot write in books the feeling of real love on which this small place on earth is based. Therefore we would love to hear from you.

RISE OF THE PHOENIX

For our Common Ownership Press, several milestones stand out in our hearts as extraordinary gifts of wisdom for mankind. Such a one is RISE OF THE PHOENIX, the exciting 1,000 page book which challenges us to embody and manifest Nuclear Evolution in our lives in very definite practical ways. The author, Christopher Hills, shares his breakthrough research into the human brain, showing us how our seven brains evolved over the ages and how they correspond to the seven rainbow levels of consciousness. He explains why the next step in the evolution of society depends on the awakening of the higher brain functions in each one of us, because our personal growth and the evolution of society are identical and inseparable. We cannot hope to grow as individuals, he says, unless we take responsibility for everyone else, nor can we hope to change the world around us unless we ourselves change. So basically the message of RISE OF THE PHOENIX is—if you want a new world, with peace, freedom from hunger, economic security and resolution of conflict, then you have the power and the instrument within you to bring it all about.

RISE OF THE PHOENIX, by Dr. Christopher Hills
1024 pages, $14.95. Full color cover. ▲

MATERIALS FOR FURTHER STUDY

You Are a Rainbow is just the beginning for readers who want to expand their awareness and to live fuller, more varied, and more exciting lives.

Listed below you will find books, tapes and tools that will take you into greater depth than has been possible in this little book.

BOOKS BY CHRISTOPHER HILLS

▲ NUCLEAR EVOLUTION:

Discovery of the Rainbow Body. Takes us through a very detailed study of the seven levels of consciousness. Shows how you can use your powerful imagination to change your life and achieve a leap in consciousness. 1024 pgs., 6 x 9, well illus., full color cover, $12.95, hard cover, $18.95.

- ▲ SUPERSEASONICS. A comprehensive survey of the ancient art of dowsing. After 25 years of research Christopher Hills not only shows how divining works but gives experiments that you can do as a follow up to your work with this book and the Aura pendulum. 624 pgs., 8½ x 11, well illus., full color cover, $15.00.

- ▲ EXPLORING INNER SPACE. (Co-author Deborah Rozman) Exploring Inner Space will give you and your family or group of friends actual in-depth experiences of the different color levels of consciousness so you can expand your horizons. Learn how to resolve conflict, improve relationships and find greater fulfillment in your personal life. 480 pgs., 7 x 9, well illus., full color cover, $9.95.

INTO MEDITATION NOW

This is a beautiful, easy to follow, step by step course in direct perception and self-mastery by Christopher Hills. Each of the 18 sections takes about 2 months to study and practice, so that the whole course covers approximately three years. The introductory section is available as a beautiful book of its own and gives basic steps for the student interested in deepening his life experiences and knowledge of his higher self through meditation.

128 pgs. 8½ x 11, well illus., full color cover, $5.95.

BOOKS BY OTHER AUTHORS

- ▲ JOURNEY INTO LIGHT, by Ann Ray: A brilliant book of spiritual teachings based on the author's real life struggles with love, sex, attachment, and the surrender needed for self-realization. A vivid account of how one woman handles the tests many of us have to face on the different color levels. With valuable keys for anyone who wants to become a greater person. 304 pgs., 7 x 9, well illus., full color cover, $7.95.
- ▲ YOUR ELECTRO-VIBRATORY BODY, by Victor Beasley: This book provides a backdrop for Nuclear Evolution in its survey of worldwide research into subtle energies. Dr. Beasley's findings also show that our moods, personality and health are affected by magnetic and electric fields, positive and negative ions, light and colors, and even the thoughts of others. 304 pgs., 7 x 9, well illus., full color cover, $9.95.

▲ WHOLISTIC HEALTH AND LIVING YOGA

by Malcolm Strutt: This book emphasizes the link between health and the understanding of the levels of consciousness. Detailed instructions on yogic postures, meditation and other evolutionary techniques reveal the inter-relatedness of body, mind and spirit. 320 pgs., 7 x 9, photography throughout, full color cover, $9.95.

▲ ENERGY, MATTER AND FORM, by Roger Smith,

Phil Allen, Alastair Bearer: With this book you can ★ Communicate with the cells of your body ★ Feel life energy flowing through you ★ Use this energy to heal yourself and others ★ Increase your ability to concentrate ★ Develop your intuition ★ Use your imagination to change your situation ★ Learn how to see auras ★ "... a perfect handbook for the New Age." —Books West 312 pgs., 8½ x 11, well illus., full color cover, $9.95.

▲ HILLS' THEORY OF CONSCIOUSNESS: The author,

Robert Massy, describes his participation in the real life drama of a group working together to explore the structure of consciousness and its seven main drives. 160 pgs., 8½ x 11, well illus., full color cover, $7.95.

▲ ALIVE TO THE UNIVERSE, by Robert Massy: A complete and easy-to-read manual of supersensing. Shows you how to use pendulums and divining rods to answer any question, find missing people, minerals and water. Teaches you how to use your body as a supersensitive detector of subtle energy fields. 304 pgs., 8½ x 11, well illus., full color cover, $9.95.

□ SUPERSEASONICS SEMINAR, by Robert Massy:

A beginning series on cassette tape for diviners, including work with the chakras, effects of color, divining for the Life Force, aura balancing, pyramids and the Pi-Ray Coffer. Due to the nature of this seminar it must be purchased as one whole. Order $51, 4 hrs., $32.00 for the complete series.

DIVINING TOOLS

- SPECTRUM MIRROR: Used with the Hills Positive Green for Aura Balancing, a technique for detecting and cleaning the energy centers of noxious influences and negative conditions which can cause disease, sometimes before physical symptoms become evident. The mirror surface reflects away interfering waves such as the negative thoughts of skeptics. Charged with a homeopathic quantity (not harmful) of radium salts, which acts to amplify the energies of the chakras. The spectral band allows for tuning to the color vibrations of each of the seven energy centers or chakras. $18.00.
- HILLS POSITIVE GREEN: This pendulum is tuned to life energy—what the Chinese call chi, and in India is known as prana. It can be used to find blockages in the subtle energy circuits of the acupuncture meridians, free those blockages and charge the body field with positive life energy. This is one of our most popular and widely used general purpose pendulums for enhancing health, checking the vitality of foods, and answering questions of the heart center. $15.00.
- THE AURA PENDULUM: Our least expensive tool. Can be used for aura balancing and for answering questions about your personal life. $6.00.
- THE HILLS AURA SENSOR: Has two special features which make it more versatile and helpful in aura balancing work. First, it has a hollow handle which allows you to place specific remedies inside, such as an herb, drug, homeopathic or Bach Flower remedy, gemstone, etc. Second, it comes equipped with a radiomagnetic stimulator that caps the handle. This stimulator amplifies the vibration of the remedy and sends it down the wire waveguide into the chakra or area of the body needing the specific energy. In this way, you can inject a specific energy to counteract a disease vibration which may otherwise be difficult to dislodge. That is, through questioning you may determine that a specific remedy is called for, such as an herb. Instead of administering the herb orally, you merely place it in the handle of the Hills Aura Sensor and spin the wire tip in a positive, clockwise direction over the chakra or area needing it. In this way, the vibration of the remedy is injected quickly, directly and safely without having to take minutes or hours to pass through the digestive and circulatory systems where it is diluted over the entire body, or destroyed by stomach acids. $25.00.

All prices subject to change without notice

TAPES

□ THE CHAKRAS

The Chakra Series is an in-depth look at the rainbow body of light. In each psychic center you experience a unique world of time and perception. Here, Christopher explores each center and how you perceive the universe through it. All of us have a complete "rainbow body" and we switch from one center to another, although people usually live in one or two main chakras. By acknowledging each chakra and becoming aware of these levels of consciousness you can gain control and self-mastery of these powerful forces.

- ADC-2. THE MULADHARA (Red Center): Explore the world of the senses. Shiva and Shakti, positive and negative energies explained. 1 hr. 25 min. $10.00
- ADC-3. THE SWADHISTHANA (Orange Center): The social world and how to be free from its authorities. Develop sensitivity to others. 1 hr. 30 min. $10.00
- ADC-4. THE MANIPURA (Yellow Center): The intellect and its separative process. Intellectual planning and the cosmic plan. 1 hr. 30 min. $10.00
- ADC-5. THE ANAHATA (Green Center): The war between reason (the head) and the heart. Possessiveness and attachment. 1 hr. 20 min. $9.00
- ADC-6. THE VISHUDDHA (Blue Center): Mental operations and conceptualization compared to direct perception. 1 hr. 20 min. $9.00
- ADC-7. THE AJNA (Indigo Center): Knowing through intuitive awareness. Being able to know something yet not knowing how you know. 1 hr. 40 min. $11.00
- ADC-8. THE SAHASRARA (Violet Center): The imagination and its power to make things happen. Using the imagination to change your life. 1 hr. 55 min. $12.00
- ADC-9. REVIEW TAPE: A review tape of the chakra series with color tests taken by the group members used to exemplify relationships between the chakras. 1 hr. 40 min. $11.00
- ADC-10. NATURE OF RESPONSE TO LIGHT AND COLOR: The time world of the chakras related to color. 1 hr. $8.00
- ADC-11. QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS ON THE CHAKRAS: A discussion of union on every level of consciousness. Includes a full explanation of Tantra Yoga. 1 hr. 35 min. $10.00
- ADC-12. HOW TO DISCOVER YOUR KARMA: Learn to work through karma to a new awareness of your true self. 50 min. $8.00
- ADC-13. COMMUNICATION AND THE CHAKRAS: Is there a "spiritual path"? How to know what you do not know. 1 hr. 50 min. $11.00

□ Price for the total series: $130.00

SPIRULINA

The Light Force Family, founded as part of the business school of the University of the Trees, is a growing family of health-oriented people. Spirulina may one day not only be the answer to man's nutritional needs, but also support the survival of oxygen on our space vehicle planet earth as it flies through space. There is not much time left to rebuild our spoiled and polluted planet.

In less than one year, over 2,000 people have responded to the opportunity to gain financial freedom while serving mankind in a wholistic way, by becoming Light Force distributors. The personal and financial rewards of working for yourself and society at the same time are considerable and we want to help you gain them. Many of you may feel frustrated doing unfulfilling work that has no tangible value to society. Or you may feel helpless as world events create crises in the quality and even quantity of the food we eat. Your own health may suffer from the tension and stress of just making ends meet. Light Force Spirulina is an exciting alternative because it helps to reduce grocery bills. At $1.00 a day it is the most concentrated and cheapest food on the planet. One pound lasts a whole month.

Few Light Force distributors are skilled salespeople before they join. And they don't need to be because our tapes can train them to gain confidence and success. They are living examples of the wonderful effects Spirulina has on the health and well-being of people. The Light Force program is designed so you can become financially independent. Through a generous system of bonuses and discounts offered on all Spirulina products, your income can grow, though the amount of time you spend can be as little or as much as you want. Once you sponsor other distributors under you, your reward will be even greater, since you earn a bonus off everything they sell as well. There is really no limit, since the whole world is in need of nourishing food, especially one that is totally complete for survival. Eventually Spirulina will become cheaper and cheaper with universal production until it feeds vast numbers of people.

The Light Force Family was founded to nourish and feed a sick planet and create financial wealth and independence for its members. If you have these same goals, write to us for more information or read the following books: Rejuvenating the Body through Fasting with Spirulina Plankton, by Christopher Hills ($2.50). The Secrets of Spirulina: Medical Discoveries of Japanese Doctors, edited by Dr. Hills, ($6.95—full color photos). The Spirulina Cookbook Recipes for Rejuvenating the Body, by gourmet cook Sonia Beasley ($6.95—over 100 recipes).

ORDER FORM

UNIVERSITY OF THE TREES PRESS
P.O. Box 644, Boulder Creek, California 95006
(408) 338-3855

Write in order blank items desired, include 6% sales tax if you are a resident of California, and add mailing and handling charges as stated below. Send check or money order. No C.O.D.'s please.

MAILING AND HANDLING CHARGES

Each item has either a ▲ or □ next to it to indicate its mailing category. Please note which symbol(s) are next to items in your order and use the corresponding column(s) for calculating postage.

FOREIGN

- 1 Postage & handling rates: $3.00 per item. Your order will be shipped Parcel Post.
- 2 Book rate is available for $1.50 per book. We are not responsible for lost shipments under book rate.
- 3 Expect delivery after 5 weeks.
- 4 Have all checks and money orders stating certified U.S. dollars Canadian and Overseas Customers: Due to changes in U.S. banking policies, we can no longer accept your personal checks unless they are drawn on a U.S. bank. Otherwise, please send Canadian Postal Money Orders in U.S. dollars, U.S. International Postal Money Orders, or bank checks payable on any U.S. bank or banker's agency.

Total of Order	▲	□	Mixed ▲ □
0-$4	$1 00	$1 00	$1 00
$4-$10	$1.50	$1 50	$1 50
$10-$15	$1 75	$1 50	$1 75
$15-$20	$2.25	$1 75	$2 00
$20-$40	$2 75	$2 50	$3 00
$40-$80	$4.25	$2 75	$4 00
$80-$150	$6 00	$3 00	$5 00
over $150	$7 50	$5 00	$7 00

NAME _____

STREET ADDRESS _____

P.O. BOX _____

CITY _____ STATE _____ ZIP _____

[illegible]

$2.95

ISBN 916438-25-2

UNIVERSITY OF THE TREES PRESS

P.O. Box 644

13151 Pine Street

Boulder Creek, CA 95006

Tel: (408) 338-3855